Colonel Scores When Court Admits Testimony Concerning Albany Bids.

FIELD DAY FOR DEFENSE

Duell Driven from Courtroom for Applauding a Witness—Judge Curbs Hennessy.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, April 30.—After a day of spectacular incidents, the second week of the Barnes-Roosevelt libel trial ended in the Supreme Court here this afternoon, and an adjournment was taken until next Monday morning.

An incident that enlivened the day was the ejection from the courtroom of Charles H. Duell, Jr., a Roosevelt enthusiast, who brought the name of Governor Whitman into the case yesterday by the production of the Whitman-Duell letter. While ex-Senator Frederick M. Davenport was testifying in favor of the Colonel, Mr. Duell could not restrain his enthusiasm, and started to applaud. Justice Andrews summarily ordered him from the room.

All around it was a good day for the Colonel. A dozen witnesses, testifying in his behalf, linked the name of Mr. Barnes with "crooked" business and "crooked" politics and swore that Barnes engineered the defeat of the Hughes direct primary legislation and boasted of it. They also swore that Barnes tried to bring about the election of William F. Sheehan to the United States Senate by a combination of Republican and Tammany legislators. One of the Colonel's most important victories was the admission by Justice Andrews of testimony relating to the Albany "printing ring" which Mr. Barnes was alleged to have controlled.

John A. Hennessy, who had been regarded as one of the Colonel's biggest guns because of his knowledge of rottenness in the State Government, was not permitted to say more than a word or two, and H. H. Vreeland, a President of the Metropolitan Securities Company, was shut off from telling how his corporation contributed campaign funds to both parties.

The aggressiveness of William M. Ivins furnished most of the fireworks of the day. He unlimbered all his sarcasm against the Colonel's witnesses and tried in every way to discredit them.

He tried to show that ex-Senator Davenport, who fought for the Hughes direct primary bills, was willing to take aid and comfort from Barnes, the very man whom he violently attacked on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. Davenport told how in fighting for the passage of the Cobb Direct Primary bill at the special legislative session on June 30, 1910, after the Barnes crowd had defeated the measures favored by Governor Hughes, he had become incensed at the actions of Barnes in directing his fight at the door of the Senate chamber and had said to Senator Grattan, who was leading the fight in the Senate:

"You speak as the mouthpiece of a political Nero who fiddles just outside the Senate chamber while Rome burns."

Mr. Ivins went at the witness savagely. "Was that a figure of speech?" he asked.

"Not entirely," replied Mr. Davenport.

"Well, was Barnes a fiddler!"

"No," retorted Davenport; "he was not a fiddler, exactly, but he was ruthless, like Nero."

"Why didn't you refer, then, to his ruthlessness as well as his fiddling?"

Duell Starts Applause.

"Well, he was both a fiddler and ruthless."

"Did you believe at the time that Rome was burning?" shouted Mr. Ivins.

"I had a community sense of what was right," the witness shouted back. "I believed that the Republican Party in the State was in great danger on account of what I had seen going on at the door, the usurpation of authority over the Legislature by a power outside the Legislature."

It was here that Mr. Duell could not restrain his enthusiasm. He was sitting a few feet behind the witness, and began to clap his hands. Justice Andrews's face flushed.

"I want the man who started that applause taken from the room," he said. "I am not going to have this thing going on in court."

A court attendant laid hold of Mr. Duell and escorted him from the room. The witness said that either that night or the next morning he met Barnes again at the Senate Chamber door and Mr. Barnes said:

"Senator, you see I'm still here in spite of all you had to say."

Ex-Senator Joseph T. Newcomb gave similar testimony of what went on at that special meeting. He said he accused Grattan, and Grady, the Tammany Senator, of forming a Republican and Democratic coalition, and that Grattan replied:

"That's all right, Senator. We admit it, but you are only sore because we put it across on you."

One of the most startling bits of evidence against Mr. Barnes was furnished by Royal W. France, Secretary of the Republican County Men's Republican Club. He told of a conversation with Barnes in which the latter told him the club's attitude toward direct primaries was all wrong because it would bring a candidate too much into the limelight. He said Barnes told him there was not a man living whose reputation could not be ruined by too much limelight. He also said Barnes told him he would take the Republican riff-raff of Albany into the Democratic primaries and the Democrats of the same kind into the Republican primaries and nominate such certain candidates that the people would be disgusted with direct primaries before they started.

The trial moved along rapidly today, but not fast enough to suit Justice Andrews. On one occasion, during a [illegible]

FIRE SWEEPS COLON TEN DIE IN FLAMES

Burns Over Twenty-two Blocks and Makes 12,000 Persons Homeless.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PANAMA, April 30.—Ten lives were lost and property damage of more than $2,000,000 was caused by a fire which swept Colon tonight. Twenty-two city blocks were totally destroyed and the fire was not checked until twelve houses in the path of the flames were dynamited by the Coast Artillery. Two Panama policemen were crushed by the falling walls of these buildings. About 12,000 persons were made homeless.

All the banking houses in the city were destroyed, including the buildings of the Panama Banking Company and the International Banking Corporation, both of New York City. The United States Commissary, the largest on the Isthmus, also was destroyed, with great loss.

The fire started in the telephone exchange opposite the railroad station, which was partially destroyed. Fanned by a high wind, the fire swept from Seventh and Bolivar Streets, where it began, through the heart of the city. The buildings nearly all were of wood, and in a short time this part of the city was all ablaze. The largest stores and warehouses were in the direct path of the flames and were consumed entirely.

Colonel Adelbert Cronkhite, commanding the United States troops at Cristobal, sent two companies of the Coast Artillery to aid the firemen and to assist in the salvage of property. The fire brigade from Panama also went across the isthmus and joined forces with the Colon brigade.

As soon as it was seen that the flames were likely to cripple the city looting started in all directions. The Coast Artillery and Panaman police made many arrests.

The Cristobal district was saved. The wind blew embers in that direction, and for a time it was feared that the district also would be burned. Then the firemen and the artillerymen dynamited buildings in the path of the fire, saved the district and got control of the flames.

All of Colon, between Seventh Street on the south to Twentieth Street and eastward on Front Street beyond Bolivar Street, was destroyed.

GORGAS HITS AT GOETHALS.

Criticises Chairman's Sanitary Methods on the Canal.

ST. LOUIS, April 30. — Major Gen. Goethals, Chairman of the Panama Canal Commission, was criticised here today by Dr. Gorgas, Surgeon General of the United States Army and noted for his sanitary work in the tropics. General Goethals was not mentioned by name, but as the Chairman of the commission. The criticism was in an address made by General Gorgas at the [illegible] and, [illegible] "[illegible] was that I got rid of malaria on the Isthmus as I had done at Havana. I had fully expected to do so, and when we went to the Isthmus we put into effect the same anti-malarial measures that had been so successful at Havana. These measures were vigorously pushed for the first four years. At the end of our four years' work the malarial rate had been reduced from 821 per thousand to 282.

"In 1907 a new commission was placed by the President in control of the Isthmus, and in 1908 all the power on the Isthmus was concentrated in the hands of a single man, the Chairman of the commission. This officer thought it advisable to make radical changes in the methods of sanitation. These changes, ordered by the Chairman, took execution of the anti-malarial work out of the hands of the sanitary authorities and placed it in the hands of men who had no special knowledge of anti-malarial work.

"I argued against these changes as forcibly as I could, but to no avail.

"I feel convinced that if our Chairman of 1908 had been able to put into effect, in 1904, the methods he forced upon me in 1908 we could not have accomplished the sanitary success at Panama which we had accomplished prior to the year 1908."

WEST CALLS ON CARRANZA.

President's Agent Back at Vera Cruz—Saw Ruined Towns.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, April 30.—Duval-West arrived this morning, but refused to talk of his trip from Mexico City. On the way to Cuautla, where he met Zapata, he found that a part of Morelos was completely ruined. Heaps of burned timbers and ashes showed where prosperous towns had been.

Señor Zubaran gave a banquet for Mr. West and Admiral Caperton tonight. Mr. West made his final call on General Carranza this afternoon.

ROCKEFELLER BUYS LAKES.

Owns Now Owns Both Sides of Watershed.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., April 30.—John D. Rockefeller has added 105 acres to his 6,000-acre estate by acquiring the John Webber property at Tarrytown Heights. Mr. Rockefeller owns the watershed on the north of the Tarrytown Lakes and by purchasing the Webber land he owns the South side so that in effect two lakes are practically part of his estate and add to its beauty.

His plans for the property have not been disclosed. It contains valuable timber and immense quarries. The price paid is said to have been more than $100,000.

RAILROAD MEN GET MORE PAY

Awards by National Arbitration Board Affect 64,000 Employes on 98 Western Roads.

BOTH SIDES DISSATISFIED

Agreed to Changes Only Because They Were Necessary for a Temporary Peace.

STRONG ATTACK ON NAGEL

Brotherhood Men Declare He Was Unfitted to Act—President Declined to Remove Him.

CHICAGO, April 30.—An arbitration award, advancing to some extent the rates of pay of 64,000 locomotive engineers, firemen, and hostlers employed on the 140,000 miles of line of ninety-eight Western railroads in the United States and Canada, was signed here today. A dissenting opinion was filed on behalf of the Brotherhood of Enginemen, in which the arbitration was branded as a failure and the Newlands law, under which it was arranged, an inadequate device for the settlement of industrial disputes.

The award, effective May 10, and binding for one year only, was frankly declared as merely postponing the actual settlement of the differences involved. The railroad members of the board issued a formal statement criticising features of the regulations governing the arbitration, and remarking that certain concessions regarded as intrinsically unjust were made for the sake of preserving peace with the employes.

Judge Jeter C. Pritchard of Richmond, Va., Chairman of the board, explained his position, and stated that while, in his opinion, the men in certain branches of the service were entitled to greater advances than were made, he had to make concessions in order that an award might be made, and he found much of a helpful nature in the award.

Charles Nagel of St. Louis, former Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who, with Judge Pritchard, represented the Board of Mediation and Conciliation on the Arbitration Board, was the only [illegible] out that he was a trustee of the estate of the late Adolphus Busch, the St. Louis brewer, and that railroad securities form a part of the assets of the estate.

The brotherhoods were represented on the board by F. A. Burgess of Louisville, Ky., Assistant General Chief Engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Timothy Shea of Peoria, Ill., Vice President of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. The railroad members were W. L. Park, Vice President of the Illinois Central, and H. E. Bryan, Vice President of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. As explained by Mr. Burgess, the essential concessions to the men were:

Concessions Made by Roads.

1. Standardization of rates of pay on the weight.
2. Overtime pay to passenger firemen and engineers, ranging from 44 to 75 cents an hour, respectively.
3. Engineman of steam power may transfer to electric power when installed without loss of seniority rights after May 1, 1915. The board was unable, because of the newness of electric railroad service, to fix rates of pay in detail, but named $4.30 a day as the minimum for motormen in passenger service and $2.60 for their helpers; $4.75 for motormen in freight service and $2.75 for helpers.
4. Enginemen of milk trains, circus trains, and other irregular service, such as pusher and helper, receive the rate accorded on through freights, an increase amounting to from 10 to 15 per cent.
5. The men will be paid for delay while in their cab at initial and final terminals, and for time in excess of thirty minutes spent in preparing their engines for service.
6. Switch enginemen will receive an advance in daily pay of 25 cents on small engines and 15 on large ones.
7. Men held away from home terminals shall, after twenty-two hours' idleness, receive a minimum day's pay of ten hours, based on last service, out of each succeeding twenty-four hours until they get a run.
8. Through freight wage rates were advanced to 20 cents, increasing with weight of engine, and 25 cents on some of the extremely heavy engines.
9. Way freight enginemen will receive 30 cents a day more than through freight men.
10. Surprise tests will be conducted in such a way as not to endanger life, limb, or nerves.
11. Firemen will be assisted, where assistance is available, in keeping coal forward, and the coal shall be broken into proper sizes at chutes.
12. Where firemen on big engines deem an assistant necessary, the matter may, if necessary, be adjusted through arbitration.
13. Firemen will not be required to clean engines, nor will engineers be required to fill grease cups or set up wedges, when others are available to do the work.
14. The weight on drive wheels of each engine shall be posted where the enginemen can have convenient access to the information.

The Rejected Demands.

Among the requests which were not granted were the automatic release, time and a half for overtime in freight and switching service, and the five-hour day in passenger service. The award on the surprise test, which was a matter of bitter contention in the course of the four months' hearing, was precisely as desired by the railroads. Mr. Burgess, however, listed it among the results satisfactory to the men.

Judge Pritchard made the following statement:

"I am satisfied that as respects many of the propositions submitted we have approached, as near as may be at this time, a standardization of many rules and rates, which will in the future tend to remove many things that have been the cause of innumerable controversies between the railroads and their employes."

Objections of Railroads.

The statement of Mr. Byram and Mr. Park was equally brief, saying:

"That our signatures to the award may not signify approval of it in principle or in detail, a brief word of explanation seems necessary.

"Any scheme of standardization, or approach to it, which does not permit of equalization of dissimilar rates and [illegible] in our opinion, is unsound. [illegible] agreement under which the arbitration [illegible] gave no latitude to it [illegible] or reconsider [illegible]

HANEL ENTRAPPED GOT A CIRCUS JOB

WAS TO JOIN SHOW MONDAY

Fugitive Arranged to Take Work at Trenton Stand—All Avenues of Escape Closed.

Joseph Hanel, sought since Friday of last week as the murderer of Mrs. Julia Heilner, has been trapped and his arrest is a matter of hours only, according to information telegraphed to Police Commissioner Woods yesterday by Detective William Roddy in Philadelphia.

Roddy knows where and how Hanel spent Thursday. He knows the plans Hanel made then for his movements and he knows the place and hour of an appointment which Hanel made for the next Monday afternoon. He missed his man by less than twenty-four hours, but his knowledge of the fugitive's plans to elude the police enabled him to close to the one-time steward, seaman, and common cook every avenue of escape.

Hanel was in Philadelphia on Thursday. He had promised to be in Trenton on Monday. Yesterday detectives closed down on Atlantic City, Trenton, and Baltimore, and the smaller cities and towns to the north, west, and south of Philadelphia, trapping Hanel somewhere in this inclosed territory. On Thursday he had no suspicion his plans were known to the police. He may be still ignorant of their knowledge of his plans. Commissioner Woods does not care. The lines will be drawn closer today, and sometime today or tomorrow, and if not then, on Monday, Hanel will be caught fast in the police net.

The short, stocky German all but eluded the scores of detectives who had been searching for him for a week, and had not Roddy run him down, Hanel, the police admit, would have had a good chance of escaping them for all time, for the former steward had taken a job as cook in the Barnum & Bailey Circus, and on Thursday he agreed to join the circus [illegible] Monday in [illegible] Trenton. [illegible] would look for a murderer in the circus ranks.

Figured on Hanel's Chances.

To Roddy alone belongs the credit for discovering Hanel's negotiations with the circus. Roddy has been in Philadelphia since last Tuesday, when he accompanied Miss Helen Buck, companion to Mrs. Heilner, to the Quaker City to identify a pair of pearl earrings which a man, recognized by the pawnbroker as Hanel, had pledged for $5. On Wednesday a turquois ring and a diamond and emerald ring which had belonged to Mrs. Heilner were found in other pawnshops. Each had been pledged for $5.

So Hanel had had $15 since he reached Philadelphia a little before 4:45 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, the hour at which the earrings were pawned. Presumably Hanel had little cash before the murder, for he had been poverty-stricken and had been glad of a job at $10 a month. So Roddy allowed him another $5 and began work on the theory that Hanel had had $20 or less. He figured that Hanel had had to live on this for five days and to pay railroad fare from New York, since the rapidity of his arrival in Philadelphia precluded all chance that he had beaten his way South on a freight train. So Hanel must be nearly penniless again.

Two things Hanel could do and, so far as the detectives knew, two only: He might ship on a vessel as seaman or steward or he might get a job as a cook. Roddy dismissed the first theory since every outgoing steamship in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore had been watched. But the detective knew Hanel would fear to take a steady job as cook in Philadelphia, where he must guess the detectives were seeking him. His one chance of escape lay in constant travel, and since he must make his living as a cook it was necessary he should get a job in some traveling kitchen. Where could such a job be found except with the circus? figured Roddy, and to the circus he went yesterday.

His first inquiry showed he was on the right track, and close behind the man he sought. Hanel had applied for work in the commissary department on Thursday and a job as cook had been offered to him. He had taken it thankfully, although explaining that he would not be at liberty until Monday, when he would join the circus in Trenton, its first jump after leaving Philadelphia Saturday night.

Identified as Hanel.

To the circus people there seemed nothing strange in this and he was hired to go to work on Monday. Nor to Roddy did it seem strange. He figured that Hanel was fearful of discovery if he came out in the open in Philadelphia and planned on beating his way to Trenton, where there was no reason to believe extraordinary search for him would be made, and then slinking out of sight beneath the circus canvas.

There was no doubt in his mind that the man who had applied for the job of cook was Hanel, for the man who hired him identified the police portrait of Hanel immediately, though with this reservation:

"The chap I saw didn't have near as much hair and he wasn't dressed as you describe him."

This variance with the police alarm for Hanel merely strengthened the identification, for Roddy knew that Hanel's hair was very much thinner than it had been two years ago, when the Philadelphia police began a gallery portrait of him. And he knew, too, from the pawnbrokers that Hanel had changed [illegible]

Roddy [illegible] detectives [illegible] from sides, and [illegible] of Captain Cameron [illegible] began a minute search of the town, the chance that Hanel had not yet left for Trenton. Whether he had or not, however, the police are satisfied that the last betrayal [illegible]

Detective Bureau [illegible] of the absence of [illegible] Friday [illegible] o'clock every outlet from New [illegible] watched. HENRY C. COE, JR., MAY BE IN ALASKA

Father Gets Message Saying His Son, Missing Since January, Is in Fairbanks.

REPORTED IN GOOD HEALTH

Standard Oil Employe Thought to Have Suffered Nervous Breakdown from Worry.

Henry Clarke Coe, Jr., who disappeared from his home in Allston, Mass., on Jan. 30, is in Fairbanks, Alaska, according to information given out last night by his father, Dr. Henry Clarke Coe, of 8 West Seventy-sixth Street. The Harry Burns Detective Agency of Boston received this telegram from Fairbanks two days ago, Dr. Coe said:

The sender of the telegram is known to the Burns Agency, Dr. Coe said, and both the agency and the father have sent urgent messages to him and to others in Fairbanks seeking more complete information. They do not expect to receive any answers for two or three days, because of the time required for communication with Fairbanks. The town is inland, and a message from New York is first telegraphed to Seattle, Wash., sent over the Alaska Cable from there to some point on the Alaska coast, and then relayed to Fairbanks through a number of low-powered wireless stations.

Dr. Coe said last night that the message from Alaska had raised his hopes of finding his missing son. He was inclined to believe that it came from a reliable source, and he was particularly delighted because of the assurance of the good health of the young man. The father was anxious, however, regarding his son's mental condition, and in each of the messages sent to Fairbanks he made particular inquiries on this point.

"While my son's health may be good," Dr. Coe said, "I still fear that his mind is, or has been, deranged."

As soon as further assurance comes from Fairbanks, Dr. Coe will try to get into direct communication with his son, or, if that cannot be done, he, or some one representing him, will go to Fairbanks. Dr. Coe said he would not rest until the Alaska clue was proved worthless or Henry Coe was safely at his home again.

The seeming location of Coe in Alaska follows logically upon an early clue announced by the detective agency. The detectives said last March that they had information that the young man was making his way through the Northwest as a pedler. His trail, according to the report, was lost at Minot, N. D.

Since the disappearance of young Coe the theory has been that he suffered a mental breakdown because of worry over the condition of his wife, who bore him a child shortly after his disappearance, and accompanying business worries.

The younger Mr. Coe was a trusted employe of the Standard Oil Company in Boston, and apparently was happy in his home in Allston, but on Jan. 30 he kissed his wife good-bye, told her he would return shortly, entered an automobile and went away. He has not been seen by any of his family or friends since. Many clues have been run down since, but except in the case of the indistinct and broken trail leading through the Northwest they have all proved valueless.

FINDS SLAYER IS GAMBLER.

G. B. Stagg, Who Killed Watchman, Sentenced for Dice Game.

HACKENSACK, N. J., April 30.—Garrett B. Stagg, a Paterson youth, who recently was acquitted here of murder, after having confessed the crime to Sheriff Robert N. Heath, was sentenced today to not less than two years nor more than three years in State prison at hard labor and to pay a fine of $1,000 on an indictment charging him with gambling, to which he pleaded not guilty.

The evidence of the gambling came out at the murder trial and was not disputed. Stagg and other employes of the American Paper Company engaged in a game of craps on last Christmas eve, Stagg losing his week's salary. He struck Louis Walters, the aged night watchman, on the head and robbed him. The blow caused death.

The acquittal on the murder charge was due, it is said, to the court's charge that Stagg was guilty of either murder in the first degree or not at all. Judge William M. Seufert sentenced him today.

THE MOBILE BLOWN UP.

LONDON, April 30.—The British steamship, which was reported last night to have been sunk by a German submarine off the Isle of Lewis, North Scotland, was identified today as the Mobile, a British vessel, carrying a cargo of coal.

The crew of twenty-three men landed today. The officers said the sinking of the Mobile occurred on Wednesday, and that the submarine's Captain allowed them ten minutes in which to take to the boats. They drifted about nine hours before they reached land.

LONDON, April 30.—A monster German gun has been brought up within range of Dunkirk, and shells from the big weapon have been thrown into the French seaport from behind the German lines near the Belgian coast, about twenty-two miles away.

These missiles killed twenty persons and wounded forty-five.

Tonight the British Admiralty announced that the position of the German gun had been verified by aircraft reconnoissance, and that it was attacked last evening, twelve small and two large bombs being dropped.

First news of the attack on Dunkirk came in this paragraph in the day bulletin, issued by the French War Office:

"Dunkirk yesterday received nineteen shells of large calibre. Twenty persons were killed and forty-five wounded. [illegible] were destroyed."

[illegible] [illegible] communication [illegible] Berlin [illegible] that the German warships had been shelling Dunkirk, and this despite the statement in the German headquarters report that "the fortress at Dunkirk was shelled yesterday by German artillery."

Tonight this statement was issued by the British Press Bureau:

"The rumor that German warships bombarded Dunkirk is untrue. This rumor probably originated in a misreading of the French official communiqué issued today."

This statement was added later:

"The shelling of Dunkirk is now reported by aerial reconnoissance to have been from a land gun, and the reports that German warships were off that port were due to a misapprehension."

Reconnoissance was made by the British also to Ostend, which was cleared of all important craft. A Taube aeroplane appeared in sight, but kept 10,000 feet up and three miles off. A naval aeroplane chased the Taube, whereupon the latter retired.

The report from Paris that the German fleet has been seen off the coast of Belgium is regarded here as doubtful, since British war craft were bombarding Zeebrugge during the greater part of last night and again today.

Another report, having to do with naval activity in the North Sea, came in a press dispatch received from Amsterdam. This said that urgent orders had been received at the Hook of Holland for the immediate preparation for service of four Dutch lifeboats and two Red Cross boats. These vessels were directed to wait, with steam up, so that they would be able to leave at a moment's notice.

The message added that there was no explanation of this order or news of a sea fight, but that it was expected the vessels would be instructed to proceed to the North Hinder Lightship, in the North Sea near the Franco-Belgian border.

Say 15-Inch Guns Did Shelling.

PARIS, April 30.—A Havas dispatch from Dunkirk says that it has been ascertained that the bombardment of Dunkirk came from 15-inch guns situated behind the German line.

British and French seaplanes, which reconnoitered during the bombardment, were able to discover no enemy ships in the vicinity of Dunkirk, although there was a German light squadron off Ostend.

DOVER, April 30. (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—Eight German destroyers were sighted yesterday morning off the Belgian coast between Dunkirk and Ostend. Started Inland But Suddenly Changed Course and Headed Off to Sea.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WELLS, Norfolk, April 30. (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—Four Zeppelins were seen off here at 6:30 this evening. The first persons to see them was the man on duty at the lifeboat station, who, searching the skies with a telescope, saw the four craft distinctly. They were about eight miles off the land to the northward and traveling south.

They were closely watched for some time, and were then seen to turn in toward land, going quite near to the coast. Then suddenly they turned to sea and when last seen were some distance over the water.

Warning had been sent north and south along the coast and also inland, but so far no further reports of the Zeppelin has been received.

Only one of these bombs scored a hit, however, causing little damage. Two men were wounded slightly.

"Seven other bombs were dropped on the town, one exploding at the railway station and greatly damaging two express engines and slightly wounding several people. Nine bombs dropped in the surrounding district fell harmlessly in the open field.

ROTTERDAM, April [illegible]

The London Daily News [illegible] can steamer Cushing [illegible] here yesterday from Ph[illegible] cargo of petroleum, [illegible] Wednesday afternoon, w[illegible] 51 degrees 45 minutes N[illegible] 2 degrees 30 minutes E., she was attacked by a German aeroplane, which threw three bombs at the ship. The first two fell wide, but the third passed exceedingly close to the stern rail and fell into the sea, doing no damage.

At the time the ship was flying the American flag and had her name painted on the side in letters six feet long. There was no excuse, therefore, for the attack.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—While no report has yet been received of the experience of the American steamer Cushing with aircraft in the North Sea, officials are interested in the incident, and expect advices from the American Legation at The Hague or the American Consulate at Rotterdam.

There are no international conventions in force which govern the acts of airmen.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 30.—The American steamship Cushing, which was attacked by German airmen, is owned by the Standard Oil Company, and has been plying between this port and foreign countries about three months.

She left Chester, Penn., on April 11 with 2,491,010 gallons of refined petroleum, valued at $99,640, and 50,000 gallons of lubricating oil, valued at $8,580. The cargo was consigned to the Netherlands Government, and the ship is in charge of Capt. Herland. Her length is 428 feet. She was built in England in 1904.

LONDON, April 30. (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—There are rumors here that the Bank of France will release gold to London for part transference to New York, but this is not generally believed in banking circles. When the French check rate on London went to 25.57 private advices to London bankers with Paris connections contained reference to a rumor in Paris that if the check rate went higher the Bank of France would have to release gold. This may have given rise to the rumor that the metal would actually be shipped.

Since then, however, the rate has eased, and it is believed negotiations have further progressed for the establishment of a credit of something like $250,000,000 in New York on behalf of the Allies for payment of food and war material and the righting of the exchanges which will avoid the necessity of gold movements either from Paris to London or London to New York. The fact that bankers are averse to issuing any more Treasury bills as a means of financing international purchases strengthens the belief that some such method as the foregoing is in course of arrangement.

Secretive methods are followed so far as Treasury business is concerned, and it would not be surprising if a large sum had already been transferred for this particular purpose.

King George Congratulates Dardanelles Commanders

LONDON, Saturday, May 1.—King George has sent to Acting Vice Admiral John Michael de Robeck, Commander of the Allied Fleet at the Dardanelles, and to General Sir Ian Hamilton, Commander-in-Chief of the Dardanelles land forces, the following dispatch:

"It is with intense satisfaction that I have heard of the success which, in the face of determined resistance, has attended the combined naval and military operations at the Dardanelles. Please convey to all ranks, including those of our allies, my hearty congratulations on this splendid achievement."

LONDON, April 30.—After very serious fighting, in which the Turks offered a stubborn resistance, British troops, according to an official statement issued tonight, have firmly established themselves on the Gallipoli Peninsula and made considerable advance toward the narrows of the Dardanelles, while the French have cleared Cape Kum Kale, on the Asiatic side of the strait, of Turks. Thus it may be said that the second and most serious attempt to force the Dardanelles has been fairly launched.

The Turks, under the guidance of their German officers, placed every obstacle in the way of the invaders, but against the fire of the allied fleet and the gallantry of the army they were forced to fall back. The British forces lost heavily in the operation.

Landings Made at Six Points.

Six points were selected for the landings, which began at daylight of April 25. At five points they were immediately successful, but at the sixth, near Sedd-el-Bahr, the troops were unable to advance until the evening. The Australians and New Zealanders landed on the west coast of the Gallipoli Peninsula, directly across the country from the strongly fortified narrows. The other British troops disembarked at the extreme end of the peninsula, and by the 28th, when it was decided to give the men a rest and time to consolidate their positions, they had reached the northern bookend of Krithia, which is on the road which runs along the peninsula and over which they will make a junction with their comrades from the dominions and attack the forts guarding the narrows in the rear.

The French took possession of Cape Kum Kale after they had previously attacked toward Yeni Sheha, to the south on the Asia Minor Coast.

While these land operations were proceeding the fleet, besides covering the landing of the troops, kept up a bombardment of the forts in the Dardanelles and prevented reinforcements from reaching the Turks from the Sea of Marmora. One Turkish troopship was sunk by the British battleship Queen Elizabeth, which is believed again to have been firing her big guns across the peninsula, directed by airmen. The troopship was sunk off Maidos, a town well inside the narrows, which later the battleship Triumph bombarded and set on fire.

Prisoners Number 500.

The official account of the landing of the allied troops does not bear out the overoptimistic reports from Greek towns which preceded it and which mentioned thousands of prisoners as having been captured, the total of men taken by the Allies being officially given as 500. These were cut off by the fire of the ships.

Neither does the report mention operations off Smyrna nor in the Gulf of Saros against the Bulair line of forts, but it is certain that these points are being watched to prevent reinforcements reaching the Turks.

Success Unchanged.

[illegible] in the face of the British [illegible] the Dardanelles [illegible]

...the troops could not advance ...il evening, when a fine attack by ... British infantry from the direction ... Cape Teke relieved the pressure on ...eir front. The arrangements for ...nding had been concerned in the utmost detail between the fleet and the army.

"The result of the first day's operations was the establishment of strong forces of British, Australian, and French forces at three points, namely, the Australian and New Zealand troops on the lower slopes of Sari Bair, to the north of Gaba Tepe; of British troops at Cape Teke, at Cape Helles, and near Morto Bay, and of a French force on the Asiatic shore at Kum Kale, after a brilliant attack toward Yeni Shehr.

"During the afternoon of the 25th strong counter attacks by the enemy began, and hard fighting took place. Meanwhile the disembarkation of the army proceeded and was continually favored by good weather.

"At daybreak on the 26th the enemy was still holding the village and position of Sedd-el-Bahr, which was a labyrinth of caves, ruins, trenches, pits, and entanglements. Aided by the gun fire of the fleet, this position was stormed by the British in frontal attack through undamaged wire entanglements.

"Sedd-el-Bahr was taken about 2 P. M. Four pompoms being captured. The situation at this end of the peninsula thus was definitely secured, and the disembarkation of French and British forces proceeded.

Intrench Across the Peninsula.

"On the morning of the 27th, after repulsing a Turkish attack upon their left toward Cape Helles, the allied force advanced and at 8 P. M. was established in an intrenched line running from a point about two miles north of Cape Teke to a small plateau above Deb Totts Battery. From this line an advance since has been made to the neighborhood of Krithia.

"Meanwhile the Australian and New Zealand troops at Sari, who pushed on with the utmost boldness after the landing on the 25th, had been engaged almost constantly with the enemy, who made strong repeated counter-attacks, which invariably were repulsed. The Australian and New Zealand troops fought with a fine spirit of determination.

"On the morning of the 27th a fresh Turkish division was launched against Sari Bair, preceded by a heavy artillery fire. A hot engagement followed. The enemy came on boldly time after time, but the Australian and New Zealand troops defeated their every attempt, and by 3 P. M. had resumed the offensive.

"The French troops at Kum Kale also were four times strongly counter-attacked on the 26th, but retained all their positions. Five hundred Turks, who, in the course of one of three counter-attacks were cut off by the fire of the fleet, were made prisoners.

"The operation of the landing army in the face of modern weapons and in spite of wire entanglements, under sea as well as on the land, and of land mines and deep pits with spikes at their bottoms, thus has been accomplished.

"The Admiral reports that the fleet is filled with intense admiration over the achievements of their military comrades.

"The casualties in the army necessarily have been heavy. The casualties in the fleet were not numerous. They appear to have been confined to torpedo boat destroyers and to boats' crews engaged in landing operations, in which merchant Captains and officers and crews of transports also have taken part.

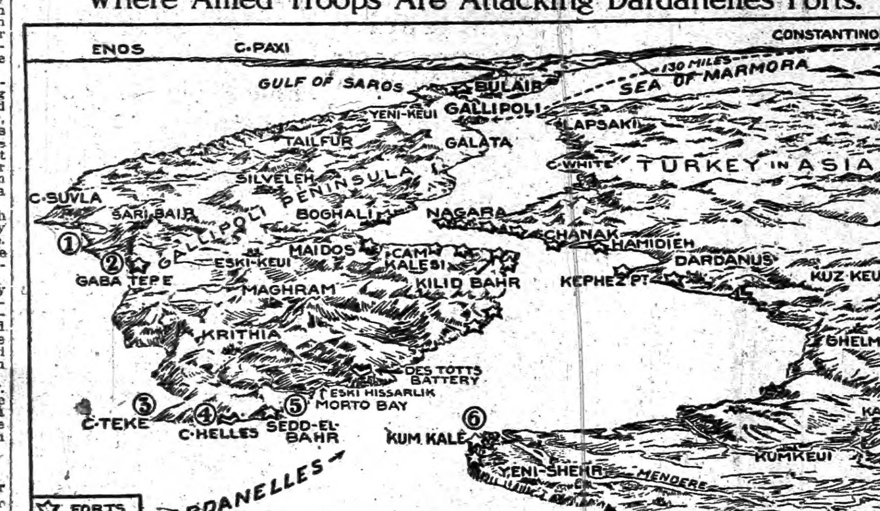
"During the operations Turkish warships from Nagara (in the strait) several times have attempted to intervene, but have always made off directly the Queen Elizabeth was at hand.

"At noon on the 27th, however, a transport of about 8,000 tons was reported off Maidos, and before she could escape the Queen Elizabeth opened fire. The third shot hit and destroyed her. She sank rapidly, but whether she contained troops or not could not be seen.

"On the 28th and 29th the allied forces rested and improved and consolidated their positions and continued the disembarkation of stores and artillery. All counter-attacks by the enemy, which were incessant on the 28th, but weaker on the 29th, were repulsed.

"The fleet, as well as the supporting army, has begun to engage the batteries. The Triumph bombarded Maidos, which was in flames last night, the 29th."

Where Allied Troops Are Attacking Dardanelles Forts.



According to the report of the British War Office, the Allies' attempts to land troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula and the Asiatic shores of the Dardanelles, to co-operate with the fleet in the reduction of the Turkish defenses of the Strait, have been successful in the face of strong opposition. Five separate landings were effected on the European side, and one on the Asiatic. The points where troops were disembarked are indicated on the map by numerals.

ALLIED LANDING FORCES DRIVEN OFF, TURKS SAY

CONSTANTINOPLE, (via London,) April 30.—The following Turkish official statement regarding the operations at the Dardanelles was given out here tonight:

"On April 28 the fire of our batteries damaged the French armored cruiser Jeanne D'Arc, which started for Tenedos in flames. An English destroyer was sunk by our shellfire on April 28 at the entrance to the narrows.

"Sixteen armored cruisers attacked our advance batteries at the narrows on April 27, but up to evening the thousands of shells fired upon our batteries and infantry positions resulted only in the wounding of a number of soldiers.

"Two transports off Sedd-el-Bahr were struck repeatedly by our shells, and one of them was beached. We sank some boats and sailing vessels.

"The British battleships Majestic and Triumph, which had been damaged, had to withdraw from the fighting line.

"For the last two days the enemy fleet has undertaken no operations against the Narrows."

An official statement issued earlier in the day said that the allied forces which landed on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles had been entirely cleared away, that a large part of the troops which invaded the Gallipoli Peninsula had been driven off, and that several warships and transports of the Allies had been damaged.

The statement was as follows:

"No enemy forces remain on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles.

"From the other parts of Gallipoli the enemy has been driven off.

"We have damaged several warships and transports."

BERLIN, (by Wireless to London,) April 30.—The following official statement was issued last night from the headquarters of the General Staff:

"Reports from the Dardanelles pay tribute to the bravery and enthusiasm of the Turkish troops. In the first battle at Kum Kale the Turks did not fire a shot, but repulsed the enemy with the bayonet.

"Forty warships bombarded Sed-el-Bahr. While this battle was in progress the Turks captured a large quantity of rifles and ammunition.

"At Gallipoli the Turks fought uninterruptedly for two days against the constant attack of the enemy without showing fatigue."

RUMOR OF GALLIPOLI'S FALL.

Paris Hears the Allies Have Taken City on the Dardanelles.

PARIS, April 30.—A dispatch from Athens to the Havas Agency says that the City of Gallipoli, on the European side of the Dardanelles, near the entrance to the Sea of Marmora, has been captured by the Allies.

It is also said that the Turkish fort at Nagara, on the Asiatic side of the strait, has been bombarded heavily.

A dispatch from London last night quoted the Athens correspondent of The London Express as saying that the Town of Gallipoli had been occupied by the Allies. An official statement today from the German General Staff said that there had been heavy fighting for two days at this town, but gave no indication as to the result.

GERMANS INVADE BALTIC PROVINCES

FLEET ALSO IS ACTIVE.

LONDON, April 30.—German cavalry, which has succeeded apparently in getting around the extreme right of the Russians, has invaded the Russian Baltic provinces. There has been no indication as to the force in which the Germans are operating, but it is presumed here that the cavalry is simply looking over the ground to find out what opposition a force landed at Polangen, in the Province of Courland, would meet with.

In military circles here it is asserted that this cavalry can, however, interfere with the Russian communications and give the famous Russian cossacks something to do.

The German headquarters statement has this to say about operations in this district:

The vanguard of the German forces, advancing into Northwestern Russia, reached yesterday the railroad running from Dünaburg (Dvinsk) to Libau. The Russian forces did not offer serious resistance. Fighting is now going on near Szawle (Schwale, on the above railroad), and Kalwarya (in Russian Poland, north of Suwalki.)

[Dünaburg or Dvinsk is about 225 miles to the east of Libau. It is an important manufacturing city, and it is described as a great depot for the Russian artillery. The railroad line between these two points runs east and west through the heart of the Province of Kovno, and it is, roughly speaking, 130 miles to the north of the boundary line between Kovno and East Prussia.]

Strong Russian attacks on our positions failed with heavy losses. German troops took prisoner five officers and 500 unwounded Russian soldiers.

Further to the south, between Kalwarya and Augustowo, Russian charges failed.

German Fleet Also Active.

PETROGRAD, April 30, (via London).—A general German offensive movement once more is under way along the entire Prussian border from Tilsit to the Vistula River. The German advance this time evidently is aimed at the Baltic provinces, which are rich in crops and other food supplies.

For months the military operations on the Prussian border had been limited to scouting parties, isolated artillery duels and aeroplane warfare.

From Polangen, a town in the Baltic province of Courland, it was reported today that an increased number of German cruisers were preparing to assist the contemplated advance of the land forces. Thus far the German offensive movement has consisted mainly of heavy artillery fire at intervals along the whole front and rapid cavalry advances without infantry support.

An official communication issued by the War Office this evening says:

On the whole front to the west of the Niemen yesterday we closely pressed the German advance guards.

During the evening of the 28th, near Ossowetz, the enemy attacked our positions in the region of the village of Sosnia, but was repulsed with heavy losses.

Enemy attacks, which were barren of results, took place between the Rivers Pissa and Skwa, north of Vakh and on the right bank of the Omulew, and continued all day the 28th. The enemy yesterday, covered by the fire of his heavy artillery, in the sector between the Pissa and the Skwa, fell back toward his old trenches.

Near the village of Jednorojetz on the evening of the 28th the Germans suffered great losses as the result of four of their attacks, which failed. Near Starojaia German forces which took the offensive were driven back to their old positions.

[illegible] the region of Gorlice, [illegible] we repulsed new [illegible] evening of the 28th, the Austrians again attacked unsuccessfully. North of the Uzsok Pass, in the Kopolvetz Forest, the Austrians during the night of the 28th-29th also delivered an attack. We allowed them to approach our wire entanglements before firing a shot. Then we scattered them by a sudden heavy fire.

In the direction of Stry, in the region of Golovetzko, we took the offensive and pushed forward vigorously to the enemy's trenches. Part of the defenders of the trenches were bayoneted, and in addition we took about 400 prisoners, including seven officers.

In Eastern Galicia the attempt of the enemy to make an offensive move at dawn yesterday in the region north of Nadvorna was stopped by our artillery fire.

SEE HINDENBURG'S HAND.

Russians Speculate on Purpose of New Movement.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, April 30, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—German cavalry, useless for the trench fighting in Flanders and the Carpathians, is now moving in the extreme north, between General Eichhorn's army and the sea. The chief advance is along the Dubissa River, a tributary of the Niemen in the direction of Schwale.

The Russians see von Hindenburg's personal hand in this new spectacular movement. The region is without strategic value except for the purpose of foraging, and cannot, owing to lack of roads and railways, be used for great movements of infantry and artillery unless they are landed from transports above Polangen.

Doubtless it is hoped that this cavalry movement will impress Scandinavian neutrals and the local non-Russian population of the Baltic provinces, besides giving General von Hindenburg an opportunity of attempting to outwit the new Russian commander in the North, Michael Alexeyeff.

Immediate interest is centred in this campaign, as the Russians have driven the Germans backward at Mlawa and along the entire front in North Poland.

FIGHTING IN THE CARPATHIANS

Artillery Duels with Russians Continuing Their Attacks.

LONDON, April 30.—The Russians are reported to be continuing to make slow progress in the Uzsok Pass and to repulse Austrian attacks on their flank in the direction of Stryi.

The general situation is unchanged. During the day artillery engagements and minor skirmishes only were reported.

Several Russian night attacks in the Orawa and Opor Valleys (in the Carpathians) were repulsed with severe Russians losses.

Berlin makes this official statement:

"In the Carpathians there have been lively artillery duels in which our fire was very effective. In the Opor Valley the enemy, after many hours of artillery fire, vainly attempted a night advance against the heights held by our infantry."

COMPLAIN OF CZAR'S ORDER.

Germans Say Harsh Treatment Is Reserved for Them and Magyars.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The German Embassy tonight issued this statement:

"According to advice received at the German Embassy, the Emperor of Russia has issued an order to treat the prisoners of war of Czech or other Slav origin kindly, but the prisoners of German or Magyar race very severely. The officials in Siberia are inciting the population against the prisoners of war by saying the Russian prisoners of war in Germany are badly treated. The agreement concerning the exchange of civilians is in many cases made useless, as the Russians consider even children or old men as 'liable to military service.'"

TURKS BEATEN BY RUSSIANS.

Fighting Renewed on the Transcaucasian Border.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, April 30, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—On the Caucasus front activity is again increasing in various regions. The Russians are advancing in the direction of Olti, on the border of Turkey, and have cleared the Kurds out of Alasehkert Valley. The fight for the valley centred on the possession of Klichgjaduk Pass, and it would have been sufficient for the Turks if they could have held it securely for only a few days, which would be quite enough for them to complete a junction with their separated forces.

[illegible] and lay low. The Turks came on, first obviously for reconnoissance and were repulsed with ease without the Russians' making any particular show of force. Then came the real attack, and a few mountain guns were brought forward to bombard.

The Russian artillery continued to lie low and the Turkish attack developed with ill-ground confidence and swept boldly up to the line of the Russian wire entanglements.

A few score paces only separated the combatants when the Russian fire opened, guns, maxims, and rifles pouring one withering storm upon the massed thousands. With the unparallelel courage of fanaticism many still came on with shouts of "Allah Akbar!" and the Russians completed their terrible work with the bayonet. The pass was secured by the Russians and Alasehkert Valley cleared.

FIGHT DEADLY GAS WITH GAS

French Use Ammonia to Minimize Effect of German Product.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 30.—A considerable number of French and German wounded who were brought yesterday to Val de Grace Hospital, gave details of the recent German attack on Ypres.

The asphyxiating gas, principally bromine chloride, which in extreme cases affects the lungs to the point of suffocation, took the French by surprise, although one of the German wounded said they had prepared it since the 15th of March. The French were forced to retire seven kilometers and left sixteen 75's embedded in a marsh which the Germans could not remove owing to the terrible French fire. A subsequent advance recovered nearly all the lost ground.

The effect of the asphyxiating gas which the Germans continue to use is now being minimized by spraying ammonia, which combines with the gas to form the non-injurious ammonium bromide.

LONDON, Saturday, May 1.—A Times correspondent in Northern France, who examined several victims of the gases used by the Germans, says that some, although apparently recovered, seem to be suffering from blood poisoning. Their feet are swollen and covered with purple blotches.

PRISONERS NOT ILL-USED.

Berlin Quotes Gerard as Finding British Fairly Comfortable.

BERLIN, April 30, (via London, May 1.)—The Lokal Anzeiger prints an interview with James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador, concerning the treatment of war prisoners in Germany. Mr. Gerard is quoted as follows:

"A diversity of treatment among British and other war prisoners in Germany does not occur. In general, one can say they are well and abundantly clad. The American Embassy here disposes of funds to provide them clothing when the wish is expressed for this, but apart from that the prisoners also receive everything necessary from the camp commandant. The diet is the same as for the German troops in the barracks.

"We receive many complaints concerning the bread, as the prisoners neither like it nor does it agree with them. However, that can hardly be helped. The meat rations also are declared insufficient by prisoners, but there is nothing astonishing in that, as English soldiers are accustomed to a particularly abundant fare. British officers complain that the sleeping rooms are not spacious enough, and that they are imprisoned in company with other nationalities.

"Apart from all this, I can only say that the fate of war prisoners certainly is not enviable, but, considering circumstances, is quite tolerable. The German authorities will take into consideration all representations from us regarding the feeding of all war prisoners in Germany. A new order of the War Ministry has been communicated to me which adds some new elements for the nutrition of prisoners, and thereby makes it considerably more amundant."

HOW HE SANK A CRUISER.

Submarine Captain Describes the Destruction of the Leon Gambetta.

VIENNA, (via Amsterdam and London,) April 30.—The following details of the sinking of the French cruiser Leon Gambetta have been received from Lieutenant von Trapp, the commander of the submarine U-5, which sent the cruiser to the bottom:

"A French cruiser, with covered lights was sighted at midnight twenty miles southeast of Cape di Leuca. The submarine from a distance of 500 metres (about 1,600 feet) fired a torpedo at her stern and followed it with a second torpedo amidship. Both hit. From the heeling of the cruiser I concluded that a third torpedo was not necessary.

"Nine minutes after the second shot the ship disappeared. Despite the short interval the French lowered five boats, which are believed to have been saved, as the sea was calm.

"I regret that I was unable to assist [illegible]

CANADIANS' LAST CHARGE.

Through Terrific Storm of Fire They Won Trenches, Checking Foe.

OTTAWA, April 30.—How the Canadians faced the German advance in the recent fighting in Flanders, and saved the day, is described in a communication from Sir Max Aitken, cabled to the Militia Department tonight of the final charge that checked the Germans' plans he says:

"At 6 A. M. on Friday the 23d it became apparent that the left was becoming more and more involved and a powerful German attempt to outflank it developed rapidly.

"It was, therefore, decided, to try to give relief by a counter attack upon the first line of German trenches, now far advanced from those originally occupied by the French. This was carried out by the Ontario First and Fourth Battalions of the First Brigade, under Brig. Gen. Mercer, acting in combination with British Brigade.

"It did not seem that any human being could live in the shower of shot and shell which began to play on the advancing troops. They suffered terrible casualties. For a short time every other man seemed to fall, but the attack was pressed even closer and closer.

For a moment, not more, it wavered. Its most gallant commanding officer, Lieut. Col. Birchall, carrying, after an old fashion, a light cane, coolly and cheerfully rallied his men, and at the very moment when his exampe had infected them fell dead at the head of his battalion.

"With a hoarse cry of anger they sprang forward, (for indeed they loved him), as if to avenge his death. The astonishing attack which followed, pushed home in the face of direct frontal fire, made in broad daylight by battalions whose names should live forever in the memories of soldiers, was carried to the first line of German trenches. After a hand-to-hand struggle, the last German who resisted was bayoneted and the trench was won."

GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS WELL

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The Russian Ambassador today received the following cablegram from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Petrograd:

"Please contradict, most categorically, false reports spread by the German press, according to which the Grand Duke Nicholas was said to be ill. The Grand Duke, commander in chief, is in perfect health and has been accompanying his Majesty, the Emperor, in his recent visit to Galicia."

PROTEST ON LIQUOR DUTY.

Prohibitionists as Well as Others Object to Lloyd George's Proposal.

LONDON, April 30.—A flood of protests have come from all parts of the country against the proposals of David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, to increase the duty on alcoholic drinks. These proposals have received little support outside the immediate Government circles.

Temperance advocates are dissatisfied because total prohibition was not proposed, while distillers, brewers, saloon and hotel keepers, have held meetings of protest, and in many places have decided upon an immediate increase in prices. Ireland particularly, is disturbed, it being the belief there that if the proposals were adopted, they would spell ruin to brewers, licensed traders, and farmers who have sown barley in large quantities this year.

IRISH M. P.'S SEE POINCARE.

Cordially Received as They Profess Devotion to the Allies' Cause.

PARIS, April 30.—The greatest cordiality marked the reception today by President Poincaré of the delegation of Irish members of the British Parliament, headed by T. P. O'Connor and Joseph Devlin, who brought addresses to the President and Cardinal Amette.

After the presentation of the members of the delegation to M. Poincaré by Premier Viviani, Mr. O'Connor read the address to the President, which laid special emphasis on the close affinity of the French and Irish races, both Celtic, and the age-long associations of the two. The address recalled how heroic Irish leaders who had been obliged to fly from their country always had found a warm welcome in France.

"Ireland cherishes with pride the memory of the Irish Brigade, one of the finest and bravest corps the world has ever seen," continued the address. "The old quarrel between England and Ireland is now happily at an end, and the Irish, joined with the other nations of the British Empire, have sprung forward to the defense of the sacred cause of liberty and justice."

President Poincaré in his reply said:

"The blood which our common ancestors have given us in now being shed by the children of our two [illegible]

FRENCH ADVANCE NORTH OF YPRES

Gains of a Third to Five-Eighths of a Mile of Ground Reported by Paris.

GERMANS CLING TO BRIDGES

Fierce Artillery Fire Keeps Up on British Front, but Forces There Are Deadlocked.

LONDON, April 30.—In their continued attacks on the Germans north of Ypres to recover territory lost in the drive of the Kaiser's forces, the French troops are gaining ground, according to official statements issued tonight in Paris and London. The night bulletin of the French War Office indicates that the area won is from nearly a third to five-eighths of a mile wide. The British statement remarks that "sensible progress" has been made.

The Germans say they still hold bridgeheads on the Yser Canal at Het Sasl and Steenstraete, but are being attacked by the Allies.

The night French bulletin says:

In Belgium, to the north of Ypres, our attacks have progressed on the whole front on a depth varying from 500 meters (about 1,625 feet) to 1 kilometer, (five-eights of a mile.)

We have taken two successive lines of trenches and captured a great many prisoners.

The correspondent of The Associated Press visited today the summit of Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, which the enemy has not attacked for the last two days.

One of our airships has bombarded the railroad and sheds in the region of Valenciennes. One of our aeroplanes, which was destroyed by an explosion, fell inside the enemy's lines.

The day bulletin says of the general land operations:

We made progress yesterday to the north of Ypres, in the region of Steenstraete.

The City of Rheims received 500 shells, of which many were of an incendiary nature. These missiles started several fires, but it was found possible to circumscribe them and to put them out quickly.

In the Champagne district the enemy shelled one of our ambulances, wounding a doctor.

This Belgian report was given out here:

During the night of April 28 and 29 our troops repulsed with success a German attack delivered from Steenstraete. On April 29 the enemy's artillery became active and bombarded at intervals various parts of our line. We occupied a farm to the south of Plauvoetbreg.

The semi-weekly report from the headquarters in the field of the British Commander was given out here under today's date. It says:

The situation on our front has remained unchanged during the last forty-eight hours. The area in the neighborhood of Ypres has been the scene of great artillery activity throughout this period, but there have been no other operations so far as the British Army is concerned.

On our immediate left the French made counter-attacks today, supported by our artillery fire, and made sensible progress.

Yesterday a German aeroplane was attacked in the air and, fired at by our guns, was brought down at our lines east of Ypres.

Successful mining operations have been carried out southwest of Wytschaete and in the neighborhood of Givenchy.

Germans Gain in Champagne.

The official statement from German Army Headquarters states that in the recent fighting in the Champagne district the Germans captured French positions extending over more than half a mile. The statement concerning the general land operations in the west reads as follows:

Last night there was fighting between Steenstraete and Het Sasl. German troops have fortified and hold bridge heads on the western bank of the canal near Steenstraete and Het Sasl, and on the east bank of the canal north of Ypres. Zouaves and Turcos attempted a charge against the German right wing, but this charge broke down under the German fire.

In the Champagne district, north of Le Mesnil, the French attempt to win back their former positions resulted in failure. A whole group of fortifications 1,000 yards wide and 300 yards deep has been reversed in its entirety and is being maintained.

In the Argonne district, to the north of Four de Paris, a trench of the enemy was captured. German troops here took prisoner one French officer and thirty men, and held the ground gained against repeated French counter-attacks.

Near Cornay, in the eastern part of the Argonne, an aeroplane of the enemy came to earth. The aviators were found to be dead.

Between the Meuse and the Moselle French attacks on positions conquered by us on the heights of the Meuse resulted in failure. To the north of Flirey, also, a French charge failed, with heavy losses. In the fighting on the heights of the Meuse between April 24 and April 28 the French lost in prisoners forty-three officers, including three regimental commanders, and about 4,000 men.

The same statement has this to say of the air raid on England last night:

"The fortifications of Harwich have been shelled from the air."

NEW GERMAN ATTACK NEAR.

Kaiser's Forces Gathering in Great Masses to Renew Offensive.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTH OF FRANCE, April 30, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—North of Ypres the battle continues to rage with great fury, but it is developing along excellent lines from the allied point of view.

Despite the repeated onslaughts of the German masses they have not been able to sustain the rôle of attackers which they initiated. It has passed to the Allies, who are once more vigorously on the offensive. During the last four days they have taken a great number of German prisoners, at least 2,000, in the Ypres sector.

It cannot be said, however, that the German effort is abandoned. Great masses of troops are gathering behind their lines, and it is probable that they will renew the battle very soon.

Heavy pressure is also being felt upon the Belgian lines north near Dixmude, but for the moment at all events the Allies have the upper hand.

The Canadians are having a well-earned breathing space. The weary remnants marched through Ypres, and as they passed, kilted regiments tramped in. The brother Scots sent their pipes to head them through Ypres, now no more beautiful. The historic town of 20,000 inhabitants is so utterly in ruins that there is but one single house the walls of which still stand. The rest have not even a semblance to buildings.

GERMANS SLEW OWN MEN?

Havre Newspaper's Tale of Shooting of Men Wishing to Surrender.

HAVRE, April 30.—The virtual annihilation of 4,000 Germans who crossed the Yperlee over a bridge near Steen-straete is described by the newspaper Vingtieme Siècle.

Belgian heavy artillery destroyed the bridge, while field artillery showered them with shrapnel. Many tied handkerchiefs to their bayonets and raised them in sign of surrender, but immediately their own quickfirers, the newspaper says, opened fire and mowed them down pitilessly. Many survivors were made prisoners by the Belgians.

JAMES DUFFY AMONG THE DEAD

Winner of the Boston Marathon Last Year Killed in War.

HAMILTON, Ontario, April 30.—The name of James Duffy, a prominent long-distance runner, whose home was in this city, appears in today's list of those of the Canadian contingent killed at the front.

Duffy figured in many Canadian races and gained fame in the United States by winning the Marathon at Boston last year. The year before he won the Mercury Athletic Club Marathon at Yonkers. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted with the Highlanders in the Sixteenth Battalion.

MORE CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

Seventeen Officers Among the Killed —One Died of Wounds.

OTTAWA, April 30.—Two casualty lists issued by the Militia Department today, contain the names of 202 members of the Canadian expeditionary forces killed, wounded, or missing, and are the heaviest given out since the Canadians have been in action. It is understood that these lists are only a beginning, particularly with reference to the killed, whose names, residences, and next of kin it takes a long time to trace.

Seventeen officers are among the killed and one died of wounds. The killed are:

Fifth Battalion—Lieutenant W. Fitzpatrick of Ashburton, England.

Seventh Battalion—Captain R. V. Harvey, Victoria; Lieutenant C. C. Holmes, Victoria; Lieutenant H. A. Bromley, Victoria; Lieutenant N. A. Jessop, Victoria; Lieutenant B. P. Latta, Vancouver.

Eighth Battalion—Lieutenant Jerry Nolds, Winnipeg.

Tenth Battalion—Captain H. A. C. Wallace, Winnipeg; Captain F. Pott, Medicine Hat; Lieutenant J. H. T. Nasmyth, Port Hope, Ont.; Lieutenant G. A. Coldwell, Brandon, Man.; Lieutenant R. Hoskins, Winnipeg; Lieutenant D. C. McColl, Medicine Hat; Lieutenant A. L. Bell, Toronto.

Fourteenth Battalion—Lieutenant G. W. Stairs, Halifax.

Sixteenth Battalion—The Hon. Captain J. H. McGregor, Victoria, B. C.

Second Battalion—Lieutenant William John Boxsee, Campbellford, Ont.

The officer who died of wounds was Lieut. Col. W. Hart McHarg, Seventh Battalion, previously reported killed in action.

WOMEN'S CONGRESS HONORS BELGIANS

MILITANT STIRS MEETING

Dramatic Scenes of the Third Day's Session at The Hague Described by Miss Addams.

By JANE ADDAMS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, April 30.—The business session of the third day of the International Congress of Women came to a dramatic climax when Mrs. Rosika Schwimmer of Hungary, after having requested the audience to rise for a silent tribute to the dead on the battlefields and to the thousands of bereaved mothers, moved a resolution urging the Governments of the world to make an end to the war, begin peace negotiations, and effect a settlement based upon justice. Unanimously the delegates indorsed her fervid plea.

Scarcely less dramatic was the presentation to the congress by Dr. Augspurg of Germany of five Belgians, who arrived late, and her motion that they all be made members of the International Resolutions Committee, though all other countries are represented by but two members. They were conducted to the platform amid the applause of the audience.

Another moment of high emotion came when the congress rose in grateful assent to the suggestion of the Dutch Arrangements Committee that the huge consignments of flowers donated by growers throughout the kingdom be sent to the hospitals for wounded soldiers in the countries nearby, England. France. Belgium, and Germany, military authorities and the Red Cross officially having already gladly agreed to see to their distribution.

Charging that international discord was deliberately promoted by a small group of investors interested in the manufacture of munitions of war, Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, an Englishwoman, seconded by a German woman, obtaiend a ringing resolution in favor of the nationalization of armaments as a step toward international disarmament.

This was later followed by an American proposal, unanimously adopted, urging the earliest possible acceptance of the principle that private investments in the resources of another country be made at the investor's risk and without a claim to official protection by his government.

A resolution declaring that the extension of the franchise to women would make for permanent peace called forth a spirited rejoinder from an English working woman, that unless women were educated they would support war as ardently as men, as, in fact, thousands are even now doing in the belligerent countries.

On the whole, today was distinctly an American day from the viewpoint of constructive proposals advanced. Headed by Mrs. Fannie Fern Andrews of Boston and ably supported by Miss Grace Abbott of Chicago, Miss Emily G. Balch of Wellesley College, Mrs. Frank H. Cothren of New York and Miss Breckenridge of the University of Chicago, our delegation introduced several of the most important planks of the congress platform subject to final discussion tomorrow.

Interest in the congress increases each day. The large hall is filled to capacity, many visitors, in addition to the delegates, listening to the discussions. In the evenings the hall is crowded to overflowing. Our great disappointment is the fact that the twenty Englishwomen have not arrived.

The President, speaking at the last open evening session tonight, was much touched by the demonstration of good-will accorded her as a representative of the largest neutral nation participating in the congress.

The congress concludes tomorrow.

Belgian Woman's Protest.

THE HAGUE, April 30.—In moving the final resolution at the International Congress of Women, Mrs. Rosika Schwimmer requested that all the delegates present stand one minute in silent prayer for peace. Mlle. Hamer of the Belgian delegation thereupon asked permission to utter a few words. When this was granted she astounded her audience with the dramatic exclamation:

"I am a Belgian before everything, and I cannot think as you do. There can be no peace without justice. The war must continue until the Belgians' wrongs have been righted. There must be no mediation except at the bar of justice."

Sometime before the congress had been considerably upset by Miss Amy Lillingston of London, wkho declared:

"I was a suffragist and I remain a suffragist. I suffered in jail for it. I am just a plain English working woman, but I represent millions of women who favor the present just war as much as do the men. One hundred and eighty women are said to be waiting at Tilbury to come to this congress to talk peace. For every one of those, a thousand English women are willing to accompany their sons and husbands to fight. We are tired of such century-old silly platitudes as are uttered here."

Miss Lillingston insisted on continuing her speech until she was ruled out of order.

BIG GERMAN GUN SHELLS DUNKIRK

not a soul had any idea where the shells were coming from.

They fell in various parts of the town, doing tremendous damage, and 150 persons, mostly civilians, were killed or injured. There was a rush for the cellars, and hundreds hid themselves there until the bombardment was over.

This morning over 2,000 refugees from the town arrived in Calais, and more were coming on later.

A civilian, traveling down the line from Furnes this afternoon, states that the warships of the allied fleets are fiercely attacking Westende, which very nearly adjoins Lombaertzyde. The fact that the firing ceased at 3 o'clock in the afternoon seems to bear out the suggestion that the British naval guns found the aggressor.

LONDON, Saturday, May 1.—The Times's correspondent in Northern France says the first shell fell in Dunkirk almost at the same moment that three German aeroplanes were seen hovering overhead. Soon other shells came in quick succession, and it became clear that the Germans had brought their big guns into range and that their fire was being directed by airmen. The correspondent adds:

"Military authorities of Dunkirk were powerless to reply to the enemy's big guns, but they opened a furious fire on the aeroplanes and drove them off."

TARGET EASY TO HIT.

London Expert Thinks Coast Guns Are Being Used.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, May 1.—The Daily Maily's military correspondent, commenting on the shelling of Dunkirk by land batteries, remarks:

"This is perfectly practicable in view of the immense range of modern heavy artillery, when suitably mounted. The British and German 15-inch guns will throw their shells at least twenty-nine miles. The British and German 12-inch guns will cover a range of more than twenty-five miles.

"The Germans have probably brought into action against Dunkirk some of the very powerful long fortress guns, which during the Winter they are known to have mounted at Ostend and Westende.

"Measurements on the map will show that Dunkirk would be within easy reach of such guns firing from these points. At such an extreme range the big naval guns could not hit a bullseye but they could easily shell a town which covers a large area."

LONDON WAS UNRUFFLED.

Reported Naval Attack on Dunkirk Caused Not a Tremor.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 30.—Perhaps no better evidence of the equanimity or apathy of the British public could have been found than the way the reports of bombardment of Dunkirk by German warships were taken today.

"The German fleet out," "Dunkirk bombarded," "Heavy damage," ran the posters issued by the afternoon papers. The public read the startling announcements, but not one man in a hundred stopped the rushing newsboys to buy papers. That the German fleet should be out, indulging in the bombardment of a port so near the British coast was evidently beyond the belief of the man in the street.

It was only when the story indicated by the posters appeared in the newspapers that people began to take notice of it. 7ven then there was no sign of extraordinary excitement.

On the Stock Exchange prices sagged, but Capel Court has the reputation of being the most nervous spot in London. of it. Even when there was no sign of of excitement, let alone apprehension.

It was not until late in the evening that an explanation of the report was issued, but the people went about their business and pleasure as if nothing unusual had happened.

In the clubs an occasional pessimist was heard asking more or less pointed questions about the Admiralty, but altogether there was an absence of anything in the way of "nerves."

Attack Called Significant.

LONDON, Saturday, May 1.—Commenting on the Dunkirk bombardment The Times says the incident is of small importance from a military standpoint, but brings the war closer to England's shores than at any earlier period of the struggle.

"We have, in the events of the past ten days," The Times says, "the clearest possible proof that, far from being on the run, the Germans can, at any moment, resume the offensive in the west with great power and obstinate courage, with an ample supply of men and guns, and in a spirit that will stop at nothing. The bombardment of Dunkirk is only one more sign of their [illegible] to reach the coast [illegible] with a bound out of that world of illusion in which the nation has been encouraged to gaze at the facts through the mist of facile optimism."

Coast of Belgium and Northeastern France

The gun which threw shells into Dunkirk was probably set up not far from Nieuport.

British war craft have been busily attacking Zeebrugge, the German submarine base to the eastward.

ZEEBRUGGE UNDER HEAVY FIRE

Several Fires Started as a Result of Ships' Bombardment.

AMSTERDAM, (via London,) April 30.—"The coast batteries at Zeebrugge were heavily engaged from 9:30 o'clock last night to 1 o'clock this morning, replying to a bombardment from the sea," says a dispatch to the Telegraaf.

"A thick mist prevented the vessels engaged from being seen, but that the bombardment was effective in places is inferred from the numerous fires that arose on the land."

According to the Nieuws van den Dag thirty shots were fired at noon today from the sea on the Belgian coast.

Zeebrugge is the port of Bruges. It is twelve miles northeast of Ostend and the same distance from the Holland boundary. It has been made a base for German submarines.

POSSIBLE, SAY ARMY MEN.

Think German Gun Is Naval or Coast Defense, Fired at High Angle.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Officers of the United States Army and Navy tonight agreed that the shells dropped in Dunkirk came from a high power German naval gun or coast defense gun ashore, fired from the German lines, near Nieuport, or from some point to the southward.

The nearest point in the German lines seems to be about twenty-two miles from Dunkirk. Artillery and ordnance experts agreed that it was possible to develop such a range with the latest type of Krupp naval guns by high-angle firing.

The range tables of the United States Navy are worked out in detail up to an extreme range of 25,000 yards, or 14.2 miles. This is the distance with which the latest types of 12-inch and 14-inch American naval guns can be fired when [illegible] say thirty degrees (and they may even be fired at an agle of forty-five degrees if mounted on specially constructed carriages) the range of these guns could be increased about 50 per cent. This would give them an extreme range of about 21.1 miles.

It is believed that the latest type of fifty calibre, 12-inch United States naval gun, which has an initial velocity of about 2,900 feet a second at the muzzle, could, if mounted on special gun carriages, fire a shell twenty to twenty-one miles. When fired at such a high angle it would be almost the same as mortar firing.

The impression here is that the Germans have brought overland some large naval or coast defense guns, and fired toward Dunkirk. It is known here that the Krupps have built a twelve-inch gun which has an initial velocity of 3,000-foot seconds at the muzzle, and an extreme range of about 30,000 yards, or over seventeen miles, from the decks of a battleship, when elevated at nearly thirty degrees. This might, it is said, have a range of twenty or twenty-two miles when fired at an angle of forty-five degrees.

Lieut. Col. Tracy C. Dickson of the Ordnance Department of the army, who is in command of the proving grounds at Sandy Hook, when told last night that the Germans were bombarding Dunkirk, France, from behind their lines in Belgium, called the German achievement remarkable. If the Germans were using their 17-inch howitzers, Colonel Dickson said, they were probably operating them at an elevation of about 43 degrees. The range of Dunkirk, he added, was probably gained with the aid of a map, which was as perfect as it is possible to make.

Colonel Dickson said that if the shells fired into Dunkirk weighed a ton or thereabout the Germans were probably using powder charges each weighing from 500 to 600 pounds. The powder is probably the finest smokeless, which sells in this country at about 53 cents a pound, but is selling in Europe, at the present time, at about twice that price.

Colonel Dickson was asked if we had any guns that could fire as far as 22 miles, and he replied that both the 16-inch and 14-inch United States ordnance would carry that distance. To do so the guns would have to be elevated at an angle of about 45 degrees.

PREFER ASQUITH TO NORTHCLIFFE

London Papers Say His Attacks on the Ministry Are Aiding the Enemy.

BLUNDERS OF WAR EXPERTS

The London Times's Military Critic's Errors Pointed Out—Said Namur Would Hold Out 3 Months.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 30.—Lord Northcliffe is the object of a hot attack in a Daily News editorial headed "Mr. Asquith or Lord Northcliffe." The writer points out how Lord Northcliffe's three papers, The Times, The Daily Mail, and The Evening News, are conducting a campaign against the Government by operations against various Ministers. The News continues:

"It is in The Times that a frontal attack on the Government is being made. There day by day in the leader columns, or in the military notes, there is conducted a definite scheme of sapping and mining, the obvious purpose of which is to destroy the confidence in Premier Asquith and the Government. In this connection, we shall ask whether the experience which the public has had with Lord Northcliffe and his military critic has been such as to warrant them in taking them as their philosophers and guides.

"It was The Times which published that cruel story of the plight of the British Army after the battle of Mons. It was another of Lord Northcliffe's papers which told of the sinking of, we think, nineteen German ships. It was The Times's military critic who said that Namur would hold out three months at the very moment when it had fallen. It was the same gentleman who, in August, prophesied that the Russians would be in Berlin in two months.

"We do not recall these things, and there are multitudes like them, in order to hurt the feelings of the prophet. We recall them to show what is the value of Lord Northcliffe and his critic as military advisers."

The Daily News concludes:

"Is the country going, in Lincoln's phrase, 'to swap horses while crossing' this unprecedented stream, simply because Lord Northcliffe has set his heart on showing that he is powerful enough to make and unmake Ministries? He does not tell us in The Times, The Daily Mail, or The Evening News, whom he proposes to put in office, but we invite the country to think of any alternatives to Asquith. When it has thought of them, it will know what to say to Lord Northcliffe and his company."

The Chronicle also has an editorial on the Northcliffe papers' attitude toward the Government. It says in part:

"We in England, of course, know how the old semi-national authority of The Times has departed from it, and, since it became a limb of the yellow press and came to be published under the same auspices under which the story of the Peking massacre was published some years ago, we expect sensationalism from it much more than responsibility. When the scurrilous campaign against the Prime Minister appears in The Times no more importance attaches to it than when it appears in The Daily Mail, for one knows that in either case it proceeds from the same source.

"In Germany and other foreign countries this is less generally realized. Articles which carry no more weight, in the Carlton and Constitutional Clubs, than they do in the Reform or National Liberal, are read with elation in Berlin and with depression in Paris and Petrograd. Moreover, foreign readers, especially in countries with a strict censorship, must discount all the statements as to the unity and the confidence of the British people as being perhaps dictated by propriety. Where the language of a newspaper points to national disunion and distrust they will naturally suppose it to be blurting out the truth.

"The Times's attempt to destroy the nation's confidence in its leaders is meat and drink to our enemies and poison to our Allies and neutral friends. It has been, and is, worth thousands of fighting men to the German cause.

"The Times does more harm abroad than any other unpatriotic paper because the legend of its former authority causes more notice to be taken of it."

The Chronicle goes on to discuss The Morning Post's attacks on Winston Churchill, remarking:

"Really the heads of the Admiralty in a great war have something better to do than to contradict the absurd invention of embittered partisans."

The Chronicle concludes its article as follows:

"At the present moment the most formidable fort which we have to face in determining the duration of the war is not the military or mechanical organization of the enemy, their numbers, or their diabolical inventions, but the confidence and unity of the German people. It is no overstatement to say that The Times is playing a chief part in maintaining that confidence and unity. Moreover next in importance to our own effort, comes the attitude of the neutrals which affects us in numberless ways, both present and prospective, and here again infinite damage is being done by the unpatriotic section of our press.

"Look at THE NEW YORK TIMES' article, summarized today by our correspondent in New York, a direct reproduction of The Morning Post's present attack by a neutral paper, which can scarcely have enjoyed the same opportunities of watching our contemporary develop its long personal vendetta against Churchill, as we have in this country. Is it a good thing that friendly America should be led to believe that our navy's record in this war is one of nine disastrous months? Is it not enough to console ourselves by observing that it is grotesquely untrue? Fictions as well as truths fight in this struggle, and no fictions can cut deeper and do us, as a nation, more serious damage than those which are formed in our own household."

The Morning Post, in an editorial answering the charge leveled against it of lack of patriotism in connection with its attack on Churchill, says:

"We are accused of encouraging the Germans and alarming the nation. We care not a fig for all this humburg about encouraging Germany. The Germans are encouraged by victory. They are discouraged by defeat. Nothing else matters. The Germans rejoiced when three ships were sunk in the Dardanelles, not only because it was a victory, but because it gave them substantial proof of incompetent strategy on our side.

"In the same way the German nation was encouraged at Antwerp by the partial destruction of our naval force which had been thrown into a hopeless position without the support of artillery. Again the Germans were encouraged by the loss of the Hogue, the Cressy, and the Aboukir, through lack of a destroyer flotilla, and the destruction of Admiral Cradock and his squadron by an elemental blunder in strategy. Such things encourage the enemy, not articles in the newspapers, and if we can secure a reform in our administration by which the expert and the sailor and not the amateur and the politician will be in control of the navy, it will discourage the enemy as much as a British victory. For the only hope left to Germany is that blundering political interferences may counterbalance the magnificent qualities which more even than preponderance in ships make the British Navy supreme."

6,227 OFFICERS LOST.

British Total Includes 1,961 Killed and 758 Missing.

LONDON, April 20, (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—An officers' casualty list for the fortnight, ended April 20, shows that the British Army lost 46 officers killed and 110 wounded—a total of 156 during the fortnight.

The casualties in only one regiment (the Royal Engineers) exceeded double figures, which had 3 killed and 8 wounded.

Since the beginning of the war 1,961 officers have been killed, 3,528 wounded, and 738 are reported missing, bringing the total up to 6,227.

SEES 'LEERING DEVILS' IN FASHION-PLATES

Katharine Tynan's Vehement Protest Against Women's Styles for War Time.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 30.—Katharine Tynan (Mrs. Hinkson,) the Irish poetess, launches a vigorous protest against the new styles in women's clothes. She does not believe that women generally, "who in these great days have proved themselves worthy of their men, who have given their all to the altar of their country, and given it dry-eyed and smiling," will follow the dictates of fashionable dressmakers and adopt costumes such as are exhibited in the fashion plates of women's papers.

Writing in The New Witness Mrs. Hinkson says:

"We may be as proud of our women as of our men; they are worthy mates and mothers and sisters of heroes. Plainly in these days we see that we are indeed sons and daughters of God. What mockery is it, then, what evil jest, that takes this high moment to present our women in every paper one takes up as not maenads, not bacchantes—for these may be beautiful—but as leering devils? Their attitudes, their figures are those of the cake-walk, the turkey trot and other uncleannesses; their faces wicked as Aubrey Beardsley's nightmares, when they are not specimens from an idiot asylum. Are there alien enemies among us drawing these unspeakable creatures, these mannequins on which to show clothes which honest and noble women are supposed to wear?

"The fashions as displayed on these horrors are dreadful enough in themselves. The flare of today is hardly less hideous than the hobble of yesterday; but I have seen the hobble, and doubtless I shall see the flare, worn by women so simple and dignified in themselves that they justified their garments.

"Do you suppose that these debased and degraded creatures of the fashion-plates may pass into a sort of tradition—for dress has its share in the making of history—of how English women looked in the greatest days for the spirit that have ever befallen us?

"When did this evil thing appear, and who is responsible for it? The ladies' papers in these days are more depressing than ever to those who believe that woman has a soul. They used to be made for the odalisque who was content not to have a soul. No normal woman disdains the arts of dress; but it was only the incurably silly who forgot that life was concerned with the eternal verities and thought only of decking the body. All that seems harmless enough now, when ladies' papers are surely illustrated for the madhouse and from the madhouse."

In conclusion the poetess suggests that these "pictures of creatures half ape, half serpent, who wear the clothes we are supposed to wear tomorrow" are endured without protest only because people are too busy to think about them.

"WILSON THE SILENT."

French Correspondent's View of Leaders Here and Public Opinion.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 30.—Under the heading, "Wilson the Silent," the Petit Parisien's Washington correspondent describes a reception by the President. The correspondent writes:

"I received from him a veiled look and some smiles. I imagined his thoughts were profound, but he kept them to himself."

"His face wore the same expression as a French General whom I once heard say at a reception, 'Aren't they soon going?'"

Summing up his impressions of prominent American politicians, the correspondent says: "I form two hypotheses, but hesitate to accept either. Either America's rulers realize today that they represent American public opinion only too feebly to state with due authority their own opinion in the present conflict or else they fear that their own opinion, however mildly expressed, might wound some belligerent, thus contravening neutrality."

The Temps New York correspondent, referring to Colonel Roosevelt's assertion that "America digests foreigners in two generations," says:

"America today evidently suffers too much undigested Germans."

DJAVID BEY LEAVES BERLIN.

Said to Have Negotiated a Turkish Loan of $250,000,000.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, April 30, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—I learn from Berlin that the Turkish Minister of Finance, Djavid Bey, left the Prussian capital for Constantinople today after one month's stay in Germany, having successfully arranged a new Turkish war loan amounting to nearly $250,000,000.

Before his departure Djavid Bey expressed great delight with his reception by the German authorities and with the Kaiser's kindly welcome, and said he hoped that in the course of two or three years the Bagdad Railway would be completed, thus opening to the Central European powers a new commercial route to Persia, India, and China.

TRACE SWOBODA'S RECORD.

Alleged Spy Once Acknowledged His German Birth.

PARIS, April 30.—Raymond Ruff Schwind, best known as Raymond Swoboda, arrested on suspicion of having started the fire aboard the steamship La Touraine and now accused of espionage, has been confronted by Major Wehring, who identified him as having been in his employ when the Major was manager of the Russo-Chinese Bank at Shanghai, according to the Petit Journal. The newspaper asserts that the prisoner admitted that he was convicted in the Consular Court at Shanghai under the name of Schwind, and said then that he was born in Hamburg, but he is said to have explained to the French military authorities that the name and birthplace were assumed.

The prisoner has written to Major Jullien of the Paris Permanent Court Martial, protesting against his long detention, saying that the charge of setting fire to the Touraine was trumped up out of spite by a fellow passenger and that the charge of espionage is altogether preposterous.

MAY TAX WAR PROFITS.

Suggestion That British Contractors May Have to Pay Two-thirds.

LONDON, April 30.—The central feature of the budget, The Chronicle's Parliamentary correspondent believes, will be a scheme for the taxation of war profits.

He is of the opinion that the Government intends to appropriate two-thirds of surplus profits made by all firms engaged directly or indirectly in the production of goods used in war operations.

Grandson of Darwin Killed.

LONDON, April 30.—Included in the latest list of officers killed at the front are the names of Brig. Gen. Riddell, commander of the Northumberland Fusileers Brigade; Second Lieutenant Darwin, a grandson of Charles R. Darwin, the naturalist, and Second Lieutenant Rhodes Moorehouse, who died Tuesday of wounds received while dropping bombs on Courtrai the previous day.

THINKS NO PANIC WILL FOLLOW WAR

Prof. H. S. Foxwell, Noted British Economist, Looks for Good Times When Peace Comes.

AN ODD GOLD SITUATION

Believes Paper Currency Will Be Contracted in France, Russia, and Germany, but Not in England.

LONDON, April 30.—The whole business world is vitally concerned in the question of how the war will affect commercial and industrial conditions. Will there be depression or prosperity? What will be the result of the destruction of such a large proportion of the efficient and productive classes? Will money be scarce and dear or plentiful and cheap?

These and other economic aspects of the great struggle were discussed with an Associated Press correspondent by Professor Herbert Somerton Foxwell, Director of Economics of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Professor of Political Economy in the University of London. Professor Foxwell, in addition to his activities in these institutions, collected the most important private library on social and political economy in Europe. When asked whether in his opinion the war would be followed by a business depression, Professor Foxwell said:

"Generally my view is that there is no sufficient reason to hold that a great war must necessarily be followed by severe depression, and less than usual in this particular case, where an immense work of reparation will be required on the conclusion of the war. A contrary view rests largely, I think, on our experience after 1815 and to a similar extent after 1873. But the prolonged depression in both cases seems to me to have been mainly due to currency causes.

"The peace of 1815 was followed by what Hoffman and Roscher called an absolute scarcity of currency; and a similar condition resulted in 1873 from the demonetization of silver. War or no war, prolonged depression must have resulted from currency causes alone; and there were other aggravating circumstances in each case to which I need not refer.

"It will be said that there must be, and should be, currency contraction after this war. Yes, in a sense—in the strict sense of the term currency. Note issues will be contracted in France, Russia, and Germany especially; not appreciably, if at all, in Great Britain.

"But modern business enterprises in the most advanced countries depends mainly on bank credits, and these again, so far as they are limited at all, are mainly limited by relation, not to currency in general, but to ultimate gold reserves. These reserves have been rather increased than diminished by this war. It is one of the most striking features that gold has been withdrawn from the circulation, where it is useless as a basis of credit, and concentrated in the great reserves on whose strength the manufacture of commercial credit depends. I hope this result of the war may be permanent. If it is, we shall have the necessary basis for a great commercial and industrial expansion after the war.

"But then it will be said the war has positively destroyed a large part of the available machinery of production, and, above all, of the most efficient and productive classes of the population.

"This last I take to be the capital injury due to the war, in a sense irreparable, in view of the mass of highly trained expert men who form the bulk of modern armies. These men cannot be replaced by any process much less elaborate than that for which their industrial efficiency was actually developed. The natural and acquired abilities of its people are the most valuable part of a nation's resources, and as the complication of business increases so does the value of trained men as compared with crude ability.

Gainful Side of War.

"I fully admit the gravity of this consideration. But on the other hand, I would say that the discipline and physical training received by that portion of the army which returns to civil life will be of great economic value. This applies particularly to Great Britain. Want of discipline, and town life, have seriously handicapped us for all useful purposes. The higher moral tone evoked by the war will also be an immense gain.

"Further I hold that existing resources, owing to dislocations in the machinery of demand and supply, are rarely fully utilized, perhaps by not from five to twenty per cent., say ten per cent. on the average. After the peace there will for a time be almost unlimited demand and the factors of production will be working at full power for some years at least.

"As to capital, here, of course, there has been unbounded destruction of fixed capital; and diversion of floating capital (existing and future supplies) to non-industrial purposes. For this the world will pay in the shape of a certain shortage in necessary industrial capital, in the rise, for a prolonged period, of the rate of interest. This, like a tax, will add to the cost of production, and diminish the share of the world's output available as income for the human factors in production. This again is a serious injury. We can't make our omelet without breaking eggs. But if we get our omelet, who worries about the eggs? If, after all, we spoil the omelet, then we have made a dead loss of the eggs.

Militarism the Foe.

"We are fighting to crush German militarism," continued Professor Foxwell, "and the doctrine on which it quite logicaly rests. If we succeed, there will be an immense reduction in the military expenditure which has been gradually piled up since Prussia began to assert herself at Sadowa. I do not suppose for a moment that we can go back to the scale of those days. But if we could only knock twenty-five per cent. off our present scale, it would go a long way to set off the increased rise of interest.

"This rise of interest had made rapid progress long before the war broke out. It was partly due to the great boom in trade which came with the rise in prices in 1898; partly, so far as we are here concerned, to the persistent attacks directed against property, and the crushing taxation on capital of all kinds, which had already in peace time reached our highest war levels. In the death duties, more particularly, we had an ingenious device, which, as Sir Felix Schuster and others have shown, annually converted huge sums of private capital into Government expenditure.

"The economic laws revenge themselves on those who scout them. There is everywhere, as the French say, a contrecoup against the attacks of the politician. As capital was diminished, and savings discouraged by taxation, interest rose, and to some extent recouped the saving classes. As the supply of gold is still more than ample, the rise of prices will only receive a temporary check at the peace, due to the re-opening of the accustomed trade routes, and the rise in interest would for that reason alone continue. The enormous loans necessary to finance the war will further increase the rise; that must be allowed. But there is nothing in this rise (as distinguished from a stringency in the discount market) to check the development of business. The whole history of trade since the rise began shows this. It has never developed more rapidly.

"Whether the tax on earned incomes involved in this rise of interest, so far as it is due to the war loans, will be offset by the saving on the reduction in military establishments depends absolutely, in my opinion, on whether this war is, or is not, fought to a finish."

GERMAN EMBASSY ISSUES WARNING

Advertises Notice of Danger to Travelers in the War Zone.

BUILDING UP A DEFENSE?

Suggestion That Notice May Be Cited Against Possible Claims for Damages—Cunard Agent Says Travel Is Safe.

The following advertisement was received last night by THE TIMES and other newspapers throughout the country. It came from an advertising agent in Washington, who said it had been brought to him by the Counselor of the German Embassy:

NOTICE!

Travelers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage are reminded that a state of war exists between Germany and her allies and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that, in accordance with formal notice given by the Imperial German Government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain, or any of her allies, are liable to destruction in those waters and that travelers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies do so at their own risk.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1915.

When this advertisement was read last night over the telephone to Charles P. Sumner, agent of the Cunard Line, he found it difficult to believe that it could be the German Embassy that had submitted it.

Mr. Sumner said that only a few days ago he had received letters demanding $15,000 on pain of the publication of advertising harmful to his line. Even when it was pointed out that the advertisement was only a summary of the German Government's official proclamation of a war zone around the British Isles, and that the fact that it came from the embassy seemed to be well established, Mr. Sumner was still skeptical. He said that more than one effort had been made to annoy the line and make its passengers uncomfortable.

Mr. Sumner recalled the attempt several months ago to extort $10,000 from the Cunard Line by threats of injury to its business. In this case an arrest was made, and the prisoner was convicted and is now in Sing Sing. Mr. Sumner intimated that recent renewal of the threats was one reason why he found it difficult to believe that this advertisement had come from the German Embassy.

When Mr. Sumner was asked about the precautions which are being taken with regard to the Cunard vessels he said that he had absolutely no fear with regard to them.

"No passenger is permitted aboard them unless he can identify himself. No express matter of any sort is taken. Every passenger must identify his baggage before it is placed aboard. There are now no German cruisers in the Atlantic, and the 'danger zone' does not begin until we reach the British Channel and the Irish Sea. Then one may say there is a general system of convoying British ships. The British Navy is responsible for all British ships, and especially for Cunarders."

"Your speed, too, is a safeguard, is it not?" it was suggested.

"Yes; as for submarines, I have no fear of them whatever."

Defense Against Damage Claims?

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Nobody at the German Embassy could be reached tonight when an effort was made to obtain information as to the purpose of the advertisement bearing the Embassy's signature. It was stated in another quarter that an official of the Embassy had arranged for the insertion of the advertisement in newspapers in every large city in the United States from coast to coast, and that it will appear once a week for three weeks.

In the absence of any explanation as to why the advertisement is to be printed, it was suggested here tonight that it may be intended for use by Germany as a defense against claims for damages that may arise on account of the death or injury of Americans on ships torpedoed by German submarines within the area of the German war zone.

GETS A BIG WAR ORDER.

Westinghouse Company to Have One for $28,000,000.

Guy E. Tripp, Chairman of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, confirmed yesterday the rumor that his company had obtained a large contract for war materials.

"We received yesterday," said he, "a large order from a foreign Government, the details of which are now being worked out. I can say nothing further at this time."

It is said that the company will begin the manufacture of $28,000,000 worth of small arms, chiefly rifles, for the allied armies. In addition to this order, it is said, officers of the Westinghouse Company are figuring on an additional contract of the same amount for rifles. It was said that 1,000,000 rifles were covered in each contract at $27.50 each. The company has other orders for parts of shells which have been placed from time to time since March 1, and it is figured that the aggregate of business on hand or in sight amounts to more than $60,000,000.

It is understood that the contracts already placed are "firm"—that is, payment will be made and the goods delivered even though the war end within a few weeks. The Westinghouse Company is expected to sublet a part of the orders for rifles, and in order to handle as great a bulk of business in as short a period as possible, several small manufacturing plants have been leased.

Like the arrangement followed by the American Locomotive Company in handling its war orders, the Westinghouse Company intends to reserve ample room and equipment in its various electrical works for the ordinary electrical business. A substantial part of the contracts will probably be filled at the company's foreign branches—in England, France, and Italy.

The financial district heard much yesterday about new orders for munitions of war in addition to the Westinghouse contracts. Heavy purchases for railroad cars and track material for Russia and France were reported. The Pressed Steel Car Company, it was said, was negotiating for the sale to Russia of $10,000,000 worth of cars and track-laying steel. Officers of the company have said that only small contracts for shells had been entered into, but it was known that foreign buying of railway material was supplying much business to the company's plants.

The New York Air Brake Company was also mentioned as the recipient of new orders. Several weeks ago it was reported that the company had received a portion of the $83,000,000 contract for shrapnel placed with the Canadian Car and Foundry Company by the Russian Government, and other orders for shells are understood to have been taken since that time.

EMPRESS IN MOURNING.

Visits Strassburg Hospitals Looking Pale and Sad.

GENEVA, Switzerland, April 30, (via Paris.)—The German Empress, dressed in mourning and looking pale and sad, paid a flying visit to Strassburg, the capital of Lower Alsace, on Tuesday morning of this week, and visited three hospitals where several officer friends were lying wounded. Her Majesty left Strassburg on the same night for Berlin.

She was accompanied by one woman and received only the Burgomaster at Strassburg. The population of the city were not aware of her visit.

HEARD GERMANS LAUGH AS HE FOUGHT FOR LIFE

Officer of the Falaba Says the Submarine Crew Saw Fun in the Death Struggles of Victims.

LONDON, April 30.—B. T. Peak, second engineer of the British steamer Falaba, who was rescued by a trawler when his ship was sunk off the Irish coast on March 28 by a German submarine, has just made a statement to the Admiralty definitely charging that the submarine crew laughed at the struggling survivors of the Falaba, and were indifferent to the appeals for help. Peak has been dangerously ill in a London hospital since his rescue. His statement, after telling how he was washed off a lifeboat by the explosion of a torpedo, but managed to keep himself up with an oar, says:

"I was now quite close to the submarine. In fact, I was hoping that they would pick me up, but instead they were laughing and seemed to treat it as a huge joke. There were about a dozen standing on her deck in khaki-colored clothing. The crew of the submarine had every opportunity for saving lives had they been so minded, but it was quite evident that the Germans were prepared to see the people drown."

APPEALS FOR SHIPPING AID.

Americans in Holland Urge a United States Government Line.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Complaining of the interruptions in shipping between the United States and Holland, the American Chamber of Commerce for the Netherlands and its colonies has appealed to the Government to establish a steamship line under American registry and, if possible, under Government control to provide monthly or bimonthly sailings. This appeal, which comes in a letter to Secretary Bryan and has been turned over to Secretary McAdoo, bases its request simply on the needs of commerce which is constantly becoming more congested. It reads in part:

On the other hand, American manufacturers and exporters cannot forward their goods without great difficulty and delay, and on the other Holland buyers are deprived of the merchandise ordered and forced to look elsewhere for supplies.

It is urgently necessary that, as soon as possible, a regular steamship line under American flag, and, if possible, under control of the Government of the United States, should be established in order to prevent a further congestion of goods at the several shipping ports of the States.

We inclose herewith a list of American manufacturers and shippers who seem to be unable to ship their goods to Holland. It is believed that this list will convince you of the necessity for such a line of ships.

This list, however, is not complete, new orders going to America daily, and the impression is gaining ground that Dutch merchants will be compelled to send orders elsewhere than to the United States.

If the American Government would take the matter in hand and endeavor to establish a monthly or bi-monthly steamship line to Holland, this chamber, as well as Dutch merchants generally, would be highly gratified.

The list of American manufacturers and shippers, which is appended, comprises firms in thirty cities.

LONDON, April 30.—The British Admiralty announces that trade between England and Holland may be resumed, but that passenger traffic is not yet permitted.

THE MACEDONIA CAPTURED.

British Admiralty So Reports Regarding Fugitive Supply Ship.

LONDON, April 30.—The British Admiralty made the following statement today:

"The German steamship Macedonia, which escaped from Las Palmas, Canary Islands, a few weeks ago, has been captured by one of our cruisers."

PARIS, April 30.—A dispatch from Algeciras says the Hamburg-American Line steamer Macedonia, which escaped from Las Palmas, where she was interned on Nov. 13, has been recaptured and is being taken to Gibraltar with another captured German steamer.

There have been conflicting reports regarding the Macedonia, which was reported to have slipped out of Las Palmas Harbor on March 10 with supplies for German warships. There have been other reports of her recapture.

SAILINGS FOR WAR ZONE.

Only One Ship with Grain Cargo Leaves Baltimore.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 30.—Only one ship cleared from here today for the war zone. It was the British steamer Orpheus, for London, with a cargo of grain.

SUBMARINE SINKS TRAWLER.

Patrol Boat Makes Fruitless Chase in Search of German Raider.

LONDON, April 30.—The trawler Lily Dale has been sunk by a German submarine in the North Sea, 75 miles off the mouth of the River Tyne.

A patrol boat picked up the crew of the trawler and then went in pursuit of the submarine, but the latter is believed to have made its escape.

JAPAN HELPS ARM ENGLISH.

Two Million Rifles Said to Have Reached Liverpool.

According to news received yesterday from Liverpool by the White Star liner Megantic, 2,000,000 rifles and 200,000,000 rounds of ammuniiton had arrived from Japan for the use of Kitchener's army, and were being distributed as rapidly as possible to the various training camps.

In addititon to the 3,000,000 troops raised in England, a native army of 1,500,000 men, it was said, was being trained in India for service in the war if needed.

Several of the captured German merchant ships are now being used to carry British troops across the Channel to Havre, Dieppe, and Boulogne. Names of the vessels have been effaced and numbers marked on their sides similar to the other transports, it was said.

The former Stolzenfels has become the C-4, the Scharzfels the C-5, and the Wildenfels C-11. Six more captured German ships are at Tilbury Docks, being fitted out for troop ships.

ITALY'S MISSION.

Must Aid the Balkan States Across the Adriatic, Says d'Annunzio.

BORDEAUX, France, April 30.—"Italy, by her geographical situation, is called upon to exercise toward the Balkan States an historic function similar to that exercised by France and England toward the development of modern Italy," writes Gabriele d'Annunzio, the Italian poet, in Petite Gironde.

"By unchanging laws of history Italy must become again as in the past a source of helpful influence for the Balkan States across the Adriatic.

"Those disturbed and anxious countries will be born again only in the great light of civilization through Italy revealing and stimulating a people powerful and intellectual. The child of Rome, the Rumanian, is living evidence that this destiny is about to be accomplished. The Roman way is the best way. Roman cement is as ever the strongest."

SCHIFF HAS FEARS FOR BRITISH JEWS

Thinks Their Condition Is Already Worse on Account of the Russian Alliance.

NO GERMAN ANTI-SEMITISM

War, He Says, Has Abolished It, While It Has Intensified It in Poland.

The fear that England has become "contaminated" by her alliance with Russia in so far as the Jewish question is concerned, and that conditions will be harder for Jews in England after the war, while they will be better in Germany, is expressed by Jacob H. Schiff in an article in the current issue of The Menorah Journal. In the article, which is entitled "The Jewish Problem Today," Mr. Schiff says:

"It is hardly possible to exaggerate the horrors of the Jewish conditions in the war-stricken countries, especially in the three Polands. According to the reports we get, conditions in Russian Poland are such that Belgium's plight is a mere bagatelle in comparison. The Jewish people there have been outraged in the most terrible manner, both by the Poles, who denounced them as enemies and spies, and then by the Russians themselves, who treated them as such. It is only after the Russian armies are forced to leave that the Jews are given protection by the Germans. In saying this I do not want to be misjudged, for it is well known that I am a German sympathizer. But the fact is that the Russians and the Poles alike have been inhumane to the Jewish population.

"It would be rather hard to say whether, were it not for the specific Jewish Relief Fund, the Jews would get as much relief as the other suffering people, but there is very little doubt that the Jews in the war-stricken districts, especially in Poland, have suffered a great deal more than the rest of the population. The Jews, therefore, need more relief, particularly as the civilian population has been against them.

"Beyond the immediate measures for relief we can for the present do nothing. We must act from day to day. As the war goes on we must simply keep on trying to relieve the distress. As to what is in store after the war, I am unable to form a picture, at least so far as Russia is concerned. The hope is expressed that when peace is restored Russia will do better than heretofore for her large Jewish population. But we have been disappointed so often by Russia's promises that we should believe this only when actually done and not before. I have little confidence at all in the assertion that Russia will mend her way in the future.

Demands the Abolition of the Pale.

"There is only one way to solve the Jewish problem in Russia, and that is nothing less than the entire removal of the Pale. We must ever demand this and accept nothing else. When the Jew can go where he pleases, and trade where he pleases, and live where he pleases, the Jewish question in Russia will be solved. It is the Government, the governing classes, in Russia that create the enmity toward the Jews. I believe there is no people anywhere who have at present or ever had less anti-Jewish feeling than the mass of Russian people. When once the pressure brought by the bureaucracy is removed, and the Jews are permitted to have normal relations with the mass of the Russian population all over the country, the Jewish question will be a thing of the past.

"The situation is different in Poland and Rumania, where the people themselves are anti-Semitic. It may appear strange at first that there should be such a difference between the Polish people and the Russian people in their attitude toward the Jews in their midst. But it may be easily explained. People who are oppressed generally become narrow by the oppression. The Poles and the Rumanians have had long to suffer from oppression to a great extent, the Poles from Russia and the Rumanians for many years from Turkey, from whose yoke they were freed only a few decades ago. It is generally a fact that when the servant becomes a master he makes the most intolerant master. Even if a Polish autonomous kingdom should be created, it could not be much worse for the Jewish population than it is now. But the Russian people have been happy. They have gotten used to their despotic Government and do not feel it in particular, and they have little prejudice against their still greater oppressed Jewish neighbors.

"The great numbers of Jews who have gone into the war and are fighting heroically will, I have no doubt, make a convincing demonstration of Jewish patriotism in every country, and that should make for an improvement of Jewish conditions all over, except possibly in Russia.

Fears England May Become Anti-Semite.

"But I am afraid that England, too, has been contaminated by her alliance with Russia, because England doesn't want to do anything that is displeasing to her ally, more through fear to offend her than through respect for her. So far at least, it has not come true, as it was hoped in certain quarters, that England might apply pressure upon Russia to obtain an improvement in the condition of the Jews. And, unfortunately, the conditions in England itself affecting the Jews are certainly not as good now as they have been formerly. England has always been our great friend. In England there existed no such thing as anti-Semitism. But now there are, I fear, signs of a change.

"In Germany the Jews do not suffer. They have a high standing and occupy many high positions. There has it is true, always been a certain anti-Semitic tendency in Germany. But I think this war will crush out most of that, in fact all class differences. I am quite convinced that anti-Semitism in Germany is a thing of the past.

"What part America and the American Jews should play in the efforts to bring about a permanent betterment of Jewish conditions elsewhere, it is hard to say. America has already gone pretty far by breaking off commercial treaty relations with Russia. Whether the United States could or should go further it is difficult to judge at this time. It is certainly clear that the solution of the Jewish problem in Russia along the lines already suggested would solve the passport problem and would pave the way for the resumption of regular treaty and commercial relations between the two countries.

"I do not think there is anything to do now for the Jews and for Jewish bodies in America except to work harmoniously together in the raising of relief funds. Of course, we must always be on the alert and ready to take a definite position whenever the proper time arrives. But not now. When peace negotiations begin to be talked about, I think it will be well for such bodies as the American Jewish Committee, possibly the B'nai B'rith and other organizations, to take united action. What action they should take is hard to say. It is a very difficult question to decide at this moment whether or not it would be advisable to have special Jewish representatives present at the peace negotiations to look after the specific Jewish interests. Whatever influence should be brought to bear at the proper time should originate with the American Jewish Committee, which is the most suitable unifying Jewish agent in America today."

NOT YET DISCOURAGED, VON BUELOW SAYS

Persists in His Mission to Bring Italy and Austria Together.

ROME, (via Paris,) April 30.—Prince von Bülow, German Ambassador to Italy, said today that he was firmly convinced that the negotiations which he had conducted recently in an endeavor to establish an agreement between Italy and the Teutonic allies were not only in the interest of Germany, but also of Italy and Austria, not only for the present moment, but more for the future. He remarked that in diplomatic negotiations one should never be discouraged by what seemed to be insurmountable difficulties because of the immense distance between the respective claims of the negotiating parties.

As he talked the Ambassador sat beside a small table on which were two boxes of matches. Wishing better to illustrate his point, he put the boxes at the extremities of the table, saying:

"Here is how they are. My mission is to make them gradually approach. I am doing my best to impress on them the convergent movement until they meet."

According to the latest report the two boxes, if they have not actually started divergent movements, are certainly at a standstill.

HOW LACK OF LABOR IS CRIPPLING BRITAIN

Arms Factories Hard Put to Run to One-third of Their Capacity.

LONDON, April 20.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—How serious is the shortage of labor in the British factories which are turning out munitions of war for the allied armies and navies is shown by a visit to one of the largest of these plants, the Armstrong-Whitworth at Newcastle. Visitors are allowed in the works only by permit, and there are some parts of the establishment that are sealed to all outside observers.

"At the present moment," said a representative of the firm, "we urgently need about 2,000 skilled mechanics to operate at full capacity the machinery now in the plant. We could easily use 6,000."

In those portions of the plant devoted to the manufacture of shells many of the buildings are apparently working at full pressure. But there are larger buildings which are almost unoccupied, with long streets of machinery not in use. It is explained that since the beginning of the war a considerable quantity of new machinery has been set up to meet the needs of the armies in the field, and large workshops have been erected to house this machinery. But on account of the shortage of labor it is frequently necessary to divert the skilled employes in one building almost completely from one set of machinery to work more urgently needed.

Even labor for the installation of new machinery is scarce, and there have been considerable delays in this respect.

One of the new workshops at the Armstrong-Whitworth plant, which will specialize in certain shells for army use, will require nearly 3,000 hands. This building will be ready for use in a few weeks, but the only hope of manning it adequately is that the Government will be able to divert skilled workmen from allied trades in various sections of the country.

The shortage in farm labor in England is causing increasing unrest in agricultural circles. It is generally recognized, moreover, that the scarcity of labor, emphasized as it has been by the brisk recruiting in rural districts, will remain a vexed problem after the war.

Generally speaking, the shortage of labor is felt in every agricultural community in the United Kingdom, and in many cases it has compelled a change in farming methods.

In some sections the scarcity of farmhands is not so serious as the lack of horses. The lack of male labor is being filled as far as possible by the use of female and child labor. In the dairy and in the care of small stock it is likely that male labor will be almost entirely dispensed with. Much of the lighter feild work is also being done by women, and in the market gardening districts they may be seen in large numbers at such tasks as weeding and setting plants. On some of the smaller holdings they have even undertaken the rougher work of plowing and cultivating.

Some of the agricultural colleges have organized short courses of instruction for women who are willing to enter farm work. A college in Shropshire which has just completed its first course of this nature had more applicants than it could accommodate. The course of instruction includes milking, dairy work, live stock, poultry, preparation of land, use of tools, planting, and cultivation. The course requires eight hours' work daily for fourteen days.

Wages throughout the farming districts have advanced sharply, the average increase being about $1 weekly.

URGE POPE TO DROP NEUTRAL ATTITUD

French and Belgian Prelates Appeal for His Censure of War Outrages.

AN EPOCHAL OPPORTUNITY

Memorandum to the Pontiff Begs Him to Seize It as the Head of the Christian World.

ROME, April 30.—Belgian and French Cardinals, Arichbishops and Bishops have united in an appeal to Pope Benedict for the Vatican to abandon the attitude of neutrality it has maintained since the beginning of the war. They say they cannot understand how the head of a church which is founded on principles of right and justice can remain neutral without protesting at the same time against those who violate written or unwritten law. The Pontiff is urged to assume an attitude which would be epoch-making in the history of the Papacy.

Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Malines, Cardinal Amette, Archbishop of Paris, and other members of the Sacred College have sent an identical memorandum to the Pope insisting that such an opportunity may never occur again for the church to show that it stands above political considerations, caring only for the moral and religious interests of its people. It is recalled that even in the Vatican Council of 1870 a petition signed by forty Bishops was presented, demanding that the church promulgate Christian principles to regulate war and the rights of nations. Other attempts having the same object were made even before that date. In 1868 Cardinal Coullie accepted the patronage of the "Union for the Study of Rights of Nations According to Christian Principles." Among those who joined in the movement were Cardinals Rampolla, Mercier, Bourne, Amette, Maffi and Vaszari.

The memorandum presented to the Pope says:

"Now is the moment to put into practice the result of those studies, as Catholics; and even a certain number of Protestants look to the Pope as the natural defender of Christian morality, demanding guidance in matters so connected with modern civilization which are the outcome of Christian teaching. The Pontiff, as the supreme pastor of Catholics throughout the world, has the right to lay down moral principles which should govern all Christian nations in their reciprocal relations.

"The earliest theologians condemned war altogether; but later, chiefly through the influence of St. Augustine, war sometimes was considered inevitable. St. Thomas and other authorities teach that war always is unlawful unless it is just, which justice can exist only through a just cause and a right intention.

"Injustice is no more morally right for a nation than for an individual, and its perpetrator is condemned by all Christian principles. Theologians denounce as a pagan error the assertion that 'might is right,' or that the right to wage war depends on force of arms. It is worse still when a stronger country fights from a desire for conquest or demands a great indemnity. This, after the killing of thousands, is called by St. Augustine 'brigandage,' necessitating a league of honest, peace-loving nations.

"Christian theologians call such wars thefts, and also teach that the injustice which war seeks to redress must be certain and evident. War is morally wrong when in vindication of probable or doubtful rights."

After citing authorities who condemn the unnecessary destruction of life and property, recommending love even between enemies and ordering that noncombatants be spared, the memorandum closes with this statement:

"International laws and conventions are expressions of legitimate consideration. The Hague Convention of 1907 gives expression to moral principles binding on the consciences of all Christians."

EAGER FOR GERMAN LOAN.

Subscribers Make Large Payments Before They Are Due.

BERLIN, April 30, (by Wireless to London.)—The subscriptions for three-fourths of the latest war loan already have been paid. The aggregate amount of the payments to date is 6,751,000,000 marks, ($1,687,750,000,) more than twice the amount required at this time under the stipulated conditions of the issue.

Putting Money Into Your Clothes

SOME men pride themselves upon the amount of money they SPEND for a suit of clothes.

* *

To them the "jingling of the guinea" is the gauge of social standing.

* *

Other men pride themselves upon the amount they SAVE on a suit of clothes.

* *

The standard of workmanship and material in a suit is a SURE INDICATION of its wearing quality.

But the EXTRA PRICE asked by a crack tailor is represented largely by CORRECTNESS OF FASHION.

* *

Weber and Heilbroner suits, ready-made, supply approximately the same materials and workmanship as the crack tailor.

* *

They supply the SAME FASHION—and therefore the same correctness.

That they give MAXIMUM WEAR goes without saying.

* *

Instead of putting $60 or $70 into a suit, you purchase one of these, at $20 to $40.

You put the balance in your pocket—which is the BEST WAY of putting money into clothes.

500 SIGN PLEDGE ON BRYAN'S PLEA

As Part of Carnegie Hall Audience Agrees to Abstain Secretary Signs as Witness.

GAVE STATISTICAL LECTURE

Said Corn Crop Was Worth $1,700,000,000, but 50 Per Cent. More Was Spent for Liquor.

After Secretary of State Bryan had adddressed a large meeting in Carnegie Hall last night, held under the auspices of the National Abstainers' Union, more than 500 in the audience filed up to the stage and signed the pledge, insisting that Mr. Bryan also sign his name as a witness.

It has been some time since New York attempted an old-fashioned temperance meeting. There was the music, the pledges, the collection, the orator, and the stand with a pitcher of water and a glass, but there was no "personal experience" testimony.

Secretary Bryan made the only extended speech of the evening, occupying within a few minutes of an hour. His speech bristled with figures, facts, and argument. When it was over and the ushers started to collect he signed pledges while Booker T. Washington made a short address. Secretary Bryan had said he would sign any one's pledge as a witness, and as soon as the negro educator had finished speaking the audience began to crowd down to the stage to get the promised signature.

Mr. Bryan had said he would devote his Sundays in Washington to signing pledges, but the audience insisted that he do it at once. In half a minute after the rush started there were more than 500 people clamoring about the stage.

He told his auditors that he was glad to be able to talk on a question that had no political significance. "I have spent a large part of my life in political contests," he said, "and I have not lost interest in them yet. I am not to be thanked for coming to meetings like these; they are my recreation, and the Republicans cannot find fault enough with me to keep me away."

Some of his aphorisms were: "Did you ever see an advertisement like this: 'Wanted—A Good moderate drinker for a responsible position'? No saloon keeper would stand sponsor for such an advertisement, for total abstinence is a virtue even behind the bar."

"In some of the belligerent countries it has been found that loyalty to Bacchus, Gambrinus, and Barleycorn is greater than loyalty to King, Kaiser or Czar."

"The aeroplane that drops its bombs from above and the submarine that shoots its torpedoes from below are less to be feared than the schooner that crosses the bar."

Mr. Bryan began his argument by presenting four sets of statistics, which showed the extent to which the money spent for alcoholic beverages compares with the sums spent on various industries and commodities.

Money Spent on Liquor.

"According to the statistics compiled by the Department of Commerce," he said, "the value of three of the great agricultural crops of Dec. 1 last was as follows: Cotton, $520,000,000; wheat, $878,000,000; corn, $1,700,000,000. Consider the land employed in the raising of cotton the amount of labor required and the number of persons interested, and then remember that we spend for liquor each year more than four cotton crops. Survey the broad wheat fields of our land, estimate the number of persons engaged in the production of this staple of life, and then remember that we spend almost three wheat crops a year for intoxicating liquors. The corn crop is the largest single source of wealth; it yields more than the wheat and cotton crops combined, and yet we annually spend for liquor 50 per cent. more than the value of the entire corn crop.

"Statistics show that 268,000 manufacturing establishments in this country employ over 6,500,000 wage earners, and that these wage earners add $8,500,000,000 to the value of the material used in industries in which they are employed. It gives some idea of the amount spent for liquor to know that during the year we spend for drink more than one-fourth as much as these 6,500,000 wage earners produce. Would not national prosperity be largely increased if the amount spent for drink was expended for food and clothing and homes?

"Second—As we are all interested in good roads, I have made a computation to ascertain how far the amount spent for liquor would go toward the building of good roads in the United States. I find that the average cost of a macadam road sixteen feet wide and seven inches thick is about $6,500 per mile. This is the estimate furnished by the Office of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture; but to be sure that we are liberal in our estimate, let us put it at $8,333 per mile—or three miles for $25,000. This enables us to make our computation in round numbers. If $25,000 will build three miles of macadam road, then $2,500,000,000 will build 300,000 miles. If we count the distance from ocean to ocean at 3,000 miles, the annual amount spent for drink would build 100 macadam highways across the continent; and these, counting the width of the country north and south at 1,200 miles, would give us a highway every twelve miles.

Highway Every 12 Miles.

If in the second year we built 300,000 miles of highways running north and south we could in two years have the United States gridironed with macadamed roads twelve miles apart, so that every citizen would be within six miles of a good road, which would put him into communication with every other part of the United States. In less than eight years' time every mile of public road in the United States could be macadamized with the amount spent for alcoholic liquors. The amount now expended in paving the road to perdition would, if spent for good roads, soon lift the mud embargo from the entire country. Calculate, if you will, the change that would follow the investment of the nation's drink money in paved highways, the increase in comfort to the farmer and his family, the increased attractiveness of country life, and the commercial value of these good roads to the towns and cities of the land.

"Now, let us proceed to the third comparison: According to the statistics furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission the railroads pay out each year to their employes $1,373,422,472—or only a little more than one-half the amount expended for alcoholic liquor. Take a railroad map of the United States, trace the lines east and west, north and south, and the diagonal lines, and then estimate the number of men required to operate them—the engineers who keep faithful vigil while the passengers sleep; the conductors who, ever alert, direct the trains; the men who, at the switch, on the road and in the stations, are required for the traffic, passenger and freight—this great army receives for this work, indispensable to the nation's prosperity, but a little more than one-half of the amount that is paid for the drink which unfits men for any responsible position.

"The railroads of the country are capitalized at $20,247,301,257, of which $8,680,759,704 represents capital stock, and $11,566,541,553 represents bonded indebtedness. A considerable portion of this capitalization is water, and does not represent actual value; the commission is now at work collecting information as to the physical value of these roads, and we shall know in a few years what it would cost to reproduce them, but, taking them at their book value, it would only require eight years to duplicate these railroads if the annual amount spent for liquor was devoted to railroad building. Does not this comparison give you some idea of the importance of the liquor question to the nation?

Exceeds Capital of All Banks.

"Fourth—As New York is the financial centre of the country and is destined to be the Clearing House of the world, comparison: The statistics compiled by the Treasury Department show that there are 7,581 national banks in the United States with a capital stock of $1,065,951,505, and a surplus of $726,935,755—or a total capital and surplus of a little less than $1,800,000,000. Is it not appalling to think that the amount spent for drink each year would duplicate all the national banks in the country, supply them with their present capital and surplus, and then leave a balance of $700,000,000 to be invested in other ways?

"There are in the United States 19,240 banks, other than national—that is, State and private banks—having a total capitalization of $1,073,881,738, and a total surplus of $991,147,876; or a total of capital and surplus of a little less than $2,100,000,000. The amount spent for liquor each year would furnish the capital and surplus for these more than nineteen thousand banks, and leave a balance of $400,000,000.

"In other words, the amount now spent annually for drink would in two years, duplicate all the banks of the country, state and national, furnish them with capital and surplus equal to that which they now have, and leave a billion dollars for other investments. Is it not worth while to give some attention to the liquor question? Imagine, if you can, the effect upon the home life of the country if the amount invested in drink were invested in bank stoc,ank d what do you think would be the effect upon business if the capital and surplus of the banks were doubled in two years?"

William S. Bennet, who presided, read a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which he expressed the wish that Secretary Bryan might "inspire many of his audience with the love of temperance in all things."

The first speaker was the Rev. Rufus W. Miller, Chairman of the Committee of Direction of the National Abstainers' Union, who explained the purposes of the movement. He advocated making the Fourth of July a patriotic temperance day, and said those who worked for abstinence were "heroes of the durable."

Included in the audience were students from high schools, Columbia University, City College, New York University, and the medical schools. There were a hundred students from the Union and the General Theological Seminaries and others from the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute.

Mr. Bryan left for Washington immediately after the meeting.

SUNDAY IN MILD FORM.

Addresses 300 in Home of E. H. Wells of Montclair, N. J.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 30.—Mild language was used by Billy Sunday today when he addressed a gathering of 300 men and women in the home of E. H. Wells at 100 South Mountain Avenue, in Montclair's "millionaire district." "Ma" Sunday also spoke.

The evangelist said he had a great liking for material things. David, he said, was enormously wealthy, but still he found favor in the eyes of God.

"Solomon was so rich that he could have hired John D. Rockefeller for a chauffeur," said Sunday, "yet he loved God."

It was announced at the Wells home that Sunday would go to Montclair next Wednesday morning to deliver a sermon in the Montclair Theatre.

The afternoon crowd at the Tabernacle was about 3,500 and Sunday's sermon was on "The Feeding of the Five Thousand."

The evening service was more like a convention of high school "rooters" than a church meeting. Seats were reserved for 5,000 students from the schools of Paterson and nearby towns.

Sunday announced that he would attend a baseball game between the Paterson and Newton High School nine tomorrow morning and umpire several innings. He called on the audience to attend the game and support the school boys.

Sunday's appeal tonight met with excellent success, 568 trail hitters, almost a record number, coming forward. The grand total of trail hitters is now 6,947, and the campaign is closing its fourth week.

FLOUR MADE THIEF TRAP.

Child's Footprints on Grocery Floor Led to Arrests.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J., April 30.—Joseph Fasakas and his 11-year-old son, Bela, of 781 South Main Street, were committed to jail today by Justice of the Peace Oliver Van Billiard on charges of robbing the grocery store of John T. Pursell over which they lived.

The store was entered early yesterday morning for the third time and the robbery was fastened on the boy by means of flour sprinkled on the floor by the merchant. When he got to the store yesterday, the grocer found the imprint of a child's foot in the flour and traced it to the Fasakas apartment on the floor above. When the boy was arrested he said his father put him through a transom and he then opened the door to let in Fasakas.

DENY A B C UNION IS AIMED AT US

Washington Authorities See No Danger in the Mission of Brazilian Envoy.

SAY CONTRARY SEEMS TRUE

Many Evidences That South American Powers Desire Closer Relations with This Country.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—While they are still without definite information on the subject, officials and others interested in Latin-American affairs have no reason to modify the view prevailing here that the visit of Dr. Lauro Muller, Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs, to the capitals of Argentina, Chile, and Uruguay, is not intended to bring about the formation of a South American alliance directed against the United States. That discussion of a combination between the A B C nations will result from the mission of Dr. Muller is not doubted in Washington, but opinion is strong that any development toward an international compact pertaining to dangers from without South America must include this Government to the extent at least of an expectation of its friendly co-operation.

Attention was directed to the possible significance of Dr. Lauro Muller's mission by a letter in THE NEW YORK TIMES today, signed "C. H. G.," who is described as "a retired journalist," in which the writer takes sharp issue with the suggestion contained in a Washington dispatch to THE TIMES that the visit of the Brazilian Minister is the outcome of the war in Europe, but rather holds that Dr. Muller's mission has the object of initiating a Latin-American combination against this country.

Washington officials have not been ignorant of the feelings of suspicion and distrust toward the United States that have come to the surface from time to time in various parts of South America and Central America. But it was pointed out today that the writer of the letter in THE TIMES had, apparently, based his contentions on information of conditions prior to the European war; in fact, for a considerable period before the gigantic outbreak. The conflict in Europe, according to the views of men qualified to judge, has changed the aspect of the relations between the United States and most of Latin America, (Colombia and a few other countries being exceptions,) and there is now a decided tendency on the part of leading statesmen of the most important Southern republics to enter into greater intimacy with this country, commercially, financially, and, as far as possible, politically.

The feeling of mutual good-will engendered by the Niagara Falls conferences and emphasized by the withdrawal of the American forces from Mexican soil, has been further strengthened, it is maintained here, by circumstances due to the war in Europe, and some men in Washington acquainted with the situation do not hesitate to say that any combination of South American nations must work for friendlier relations with the United States instead of toward suspicion and enmity.

It is asserted here that the best elements in the greater portion of South America are more than anxious to bring about the closest friendship with the republic of the North, and are working to that end, particularly since the European conflict made Latin America realize that its dependency on Europe commercially, financially, and otherwise, was an error that should not be permitted to occur again.

J. C. O'Laughlin's Views.

In a Washington dispatch printed in The Chicago Herald, John Callan O'Laughlin, former Assistant Secretary of State, who is well informed on Latin-American affairs, makes statements that are not in accord with the views expressed by "C. H. G." in his letter to THE TIMES. Commenting on the visit of the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs to South American capitals, which he says is intended to bring about an alliance of the A B C powers which will make for the peace of the southern continent and for its defense from foreign aggression, and noting that such an alliance has been the dream of statesmen of Argentina and neighboring States for years, he makes this statement:

"An impetus to good feeling was given by the mediation of the A B C countries at Niagara Falls in connection with the Mexican situation. Now have come the dangers incident to the great war in Europe, the violation of neutrality by the belligerents, the possibility that when the peace congress is sitting an attempt will be made to give a foothold to Germany in South America."

This is contrary to "C. H. G.'s" views, which also are not in accord with the following statement in Mr. O'Laughlin's dispatch:

"There will be reports that any secret alliance of the A B C powers will be directed against the United States. These reports will be without foundation, for there is as earnest a desire in South America to be on friendly terms with the great sister Republic of the north as there is here to be on friendly terms with those States."

The evidence obtainable here indicates that the feelings of animosity toward the United States, mentioned in an extract from a book on "Colombia," written two years ago and quoted by "C. H. G." in spite of his contention that South American republics are preparing to form an alliance against the United States, are not now entertained by the most thoughtful leading men of the greater part of Latin-America.

"C. H. G." may have been in ignorance of the fact that a committee of the Pan-American Union, headed by Secretary Bryan and comprising in its membership Ambassadors and Ministers of Latin-American countries, has been at work endeavoring to devise a code of principles and rules for the protection of the American hemisphere from violations of this neutral territory by any European or other non-American belligerent. The agreement to be reached contemplates joint action by the American republics, including the United States, for their mutual protection from such violations. One of the basic proposals, which evidently suggests joint action in its maintenance, is that belligerent non-American nations shall be warned to keep their warships from the vicinity of the coasts of the American republics.

Evidence of Closer Relations.

That the war in Europe has caused the foremost Latin-American nations to look to closer relations with the United States should be obvious, it was said today by an authority, to anybody having even a casual acquaintance with conditions in these countries and the trend of thought there.

The fact that the southern republics are sending their leading financiers and public men as delegates to the Pan-American Financial Conference, to be held in Washington in May, was mentioned as evidence of the realization on the part of Latin America that closer commercial arrangements must be made with this country and that New York must be substituted for London as the Latin-American foreign exchange. This desire for closer relationship as an outgrowth of the European war, instead of combination against the United States, was voiced at a peace meeting here on Feb. 22 by John Barrett, the Director General of the Pan-American Union, in these words:

"The most remarkable potential and far-reaching effect of the war until now, as far as the United States is concerned, has been the development of a new spirit among the nations of the Western Hemisphere of Pan-American solidarity and Pan-American independence. The war has given a new significance and a new strength to Pan-Americanism."

How important South America regards unity with the United States to combat possible non-American aggression, was told at the luncheon of the Pan-American Society of the United States at India House in New York on Feb. 9 by Eduardo Suarez-Mujica, the Brazilian Ambassador to the United States. After a reference to the A B C group, the Ambassador said:

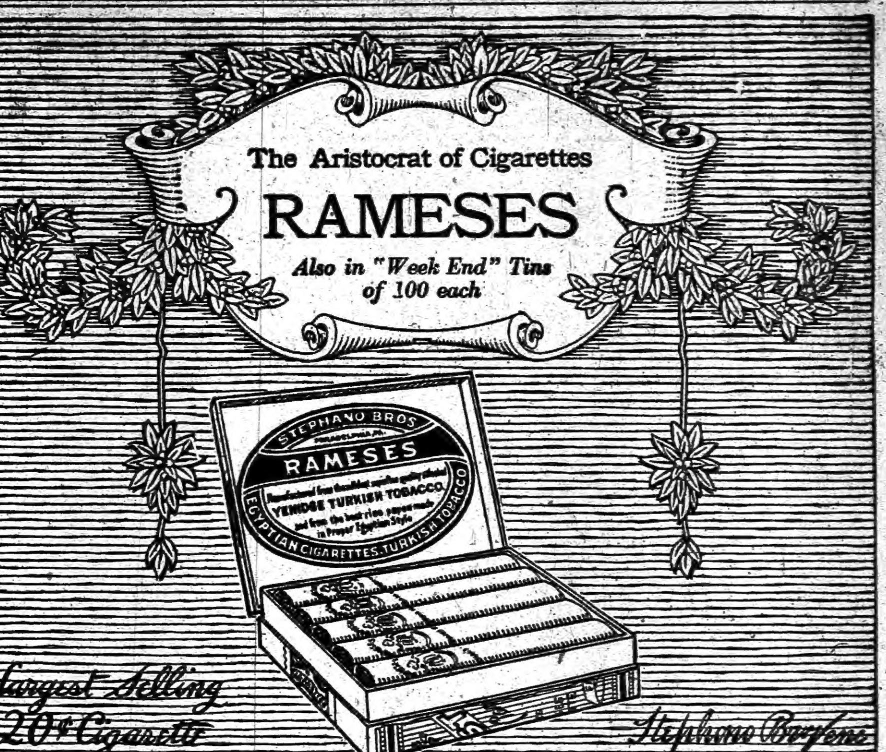
"There is no alliance whatever between them, nor is there any need of establishing it; but on the great occasions where the continent is concerned the common interest of the prestige and dignity of this part of the world unites automatically the threads of their foreign political action and places them through the very force of events into a compact reciprocally beneficial with this great northern force called the United States of America."

MRS. J. Y. BIRNEY VERY ILL.

Mother of Mrs. De Lancey Nicoll to Undergo an Operation.

Mrs. Josephine Y. Birney, mother of Mrs. De Lancey Nicoll of 23 East Thirty-ninth Street, was removed from her daughter's home to the Roosevelt Hospital last night to undergo an operation.

She came to the city from her home at Ossining to attend the memorial services of her granddaughter, Miss Josephine Churchill Nicoll, which were held last Thursday afternoon at St. George's Memorial Chapel in Stuyvesant Square, and was taken ill shortly after. Dr. George E. Brewer of 16 East Sixty-fourth Street attended Mrs. Birney and yesterday ordered that she be taken to the hospital. It was said last night that her condition was critical on account of her advanced age.



PRESIDENT ORDERS ALLIS INQUIRY

Directs the Department of Justice to Investigate Pearson Complaint.

OFFICIALS SCOUT CHARGE

Cannot See How the Milwaukee Concern Can Be Held to Have Violated Neutrality Law.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Directions were today given by President Wilson to make an investigation of the bill of complaint filed in Milwaukee yesterday by Samuel Pearson, formerly a General of the Boer war, against the Allis-Chalmers Company, in which it has been alleged that the company entered into a conspiracy with the Bethlehem Steel Company or others to ship shrapnel shells to Europe. The investigation is to be made so that the facts may be ascertained for the information of the President and other officials of the Government who are observing very closely all matters of importance having a bearing on the relations of this country to the belligerents in the European war.

In the suit instituted at Milwaukee, which was brought under the so-called "Discovery" statute of Wisconsin, an effort is being made to obtain information. The "Discovery" statute is a State and not a Federal law, but in the suit it is alleged that certain Federal statutes are being violated. Attorney General Gregory will, it is understood, look especially into this phase of the litigation.

Officials here fail to see how the case involves a violation of Federal laws or concerns the Federal Government unless there is an undisclosed something in it embracing some other question than the right of American manufacturers of munitions of war to ship them to belligerents.

In his recent note to Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, Secretary Bryan noted with regret that, in discussing the sale and exportation of arms by citizens of the United States to the enemies of Germany, the German Ambassador seemed to be under he impression that it was within "the choice of the Government of the United States, notwithstanding its professed neutrality and its diligent efforts to maintain it in other particulars, to inhibit this trade." Secretary Bryan said that the Government held that the placing of any embargo on the shipment of arms would not only change the laws of neutrality during the progress of a war, but would be "a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States."

As long ago as Oct. 15, 1914, the Wilson Administration, in a formal notification issued by the State Department, pointed out that it should be understood that, generally speaking, a citizen of the United States might sell to a belligerent Government or its agent any article of commerce whatever, and was not prohibited from doing this by any rule of international law, by any treaty provisions, or by any statute of the United States. The State Department takes the position that it makes no difference whether the articles sold are exclusively for war purposes, such as firearms, explosives, and so forth, or are foodstuffs, clothing, and horses for the use of the army and navy of the belligerent.

President Wilson takes the position, furthermore, that a neutral Government is not compelled by international law, by treaty, or by statute to prevent these sales to a belligerent, and that "such sales by American citizens do not in the least affect the neutrality of the United States."

He holds that, while it is true that such articles as those mentioned are considered contraband and are, outside the territorial jurisdiction of a neutral nation, subject to seizure by an enemy of the purchasing Government, it is the duty of the enemy to prevent the articles reaching their destination, not the duty of the nation whose citizens have sold them. If the enemy of the purchasing nation happens for the time being to be unable to intercept these shipments, that is regarded, for him, as one of the misfortunes of war.

The United States Government holds, however, that such inability imposes on the neutral Government no obligation to prevent the sale. It is insisted in official circles that neither the President nor any executive department of the Government possesses the legal authority to interfere in any way with trade between the people of this country and the territory of a belligerent, and that it is not within the authority of a State court to do so.

There is no act of Congress conferring such authority or prohibiting traffic of this sort with European nations, although in the case of neighboring American Republics, Congress has given the President power to proclaim an embargo on arms and ammunition when, in his judgment, it would tend to prevent civil strife.

For the Government of the United States itself to sell to a belligerent nation would be an unneutral act, but for a private individual to sell to a belligerent any product of the United States, other than warships and submarines, would be considered neither unlawful nor unneutral nor within the power of the President to prevent or control. The outfitting or furnishing of vessels in American ports or of military expeditions on American soil in aid of a belligerent are acts prohibited by the neutrality laws of the United States.

ALDERMAN EXTOLS WASHDAY

Panegyric by Dowling in Opposing a Public Laundry.

Borough President Marks, supported by Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott and four women from the Hudson Guild, and Alderman Frank Dowling clashed yesterday before the Board of Estimate. It was about the installation of a public laundry in the new public bathhouse at 400 West Twenty-eighth Street. The women were present because Mr. Marks had happened upon a mothers' meeting of the Hudson Guild and had asked those who liked the laundry idea to come down and support their views.

The discussion began by President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen and President Pounds of the Borough of Brooklyn withdrawing their support from the laundry scheme. President Marks urged that the plan should not be dropped.

"Into the washtub?" asked Controller Prendergast.

"This is no joking matter," retorted Mr. Marks, and the board shook with laughter. Then Alderman Dowling appeared to oppose the laundry.

"There were twenty-five persons at the Mothers' Meeting, President Marks had the tip about," he said, "and twenty-three of them reported to their Alderman they didn't want any laundry. Suppose the children come home from school and find Ma is at the laundry, are they to go hungry? Then when Pa gets home and finds there's nothing to eat, won't he be angry? I tell you it's all very fine to talk theories, but I know the facts because I live there.

"I'd like you to tell me a more beautiful sight than a line of white clothes hanging to dry in a tenement house yard on a Monday morning. It is delightful because it tells of a good mother."

Alderman Dowling presented a petition with 350 signatures against the laundry, and against him President Marks arrayed Dr. Elliott and the women from his guild. Dr. Elliott spoke of the impossibility of washing clothes in a crowded tenement with any comfort to any one, but in the end the question was referred back to President Marks for further investigation.

The public bath in question will be opened this afternoon with addresses by President McAneny and the officials.

NEW MARKET OPENS TODAY.

Cosmopolitan Garden Promises 15 Per Cent. Saving to Housewives.

The managers of the Cosmopolitan Garden, which will start business as a public market today on the south side of Twenty-third Street, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue, say that the stallkeepers intend to sell their commodities at prices that will offer an average of 15 per cent. saving to the housewives. Borough President Marks and other city officials have been invited to attend the opening at 10 o'clock this morning, and 500 boy scouts have offered their services as escorts for the expected visitors.

The market will provide stalls for 300 keepers, and 210 of them will be ready for business, it is said. The total floor space of the building is 170,000 square feet. The first floor is to be occupied by the marketmen. On the second floor will be groceries and household wares, and the third floor is to be a demonstration department. Later a restaurant will occupy the fourth floor, and the fifth floor is to be prepared for a horticulture display.

Benjamin Stern and Louis Stern organized the Cosmopolitan Garden, a corporation, as an experiment to bring the middleman and consumer closer together. The property is owned by the Isaac Stern estate.

Wallstein Shows a Saving.

Commissioner of Accounts Leonard M. Wallstein said yesterday that it was unfair to complain that the appropriations for his office this year were $40,000 in excess of those for 1914. This year the office is charged with the cost of the "efficiency staff," which last year was carried by the Board of Estimate. If this year's appropriation, including the "efficiency staff," was compared with last year's appropriations for both the Commissioner of Accounts' office and the "efficiency staff," it would be found, he said, that there was a net saving of $9,449.09.

4 IN PINK PAJAMAS ESCAPE BELLEVUE

ALL BUT ONE RECAPTURED

In pink pajamas, four drug users, two convicted of burglary and two convicted of having cocaine, stole from the narcotics ward in Bellevue Hospital, where they were prisoners, last night, into an adjoining washroom, broke a screen, climbed out of the window and down a fire escape, ran across the yard, scaled an eight-foot fence, and escaped into East Twenty-seventh Street. After a thorough search of the neighborhood by policemen, hospital attendants, and small boys, three of the men were soon caught, but the fourth remained at liberty.

The four who escaped were Anthony Coggi, a laborer, of 175 Baxter Street; Peter Pryor, a driver, of 1,181 Second Avenue; Harry Degnan, an elevator operator, of 349 East 193d Street, the Bronx, and Nicholas Colletti, a barber, of 250 West Thirty-sixth Street. Colletti was not caught. When last reported seen he was running west in Thirty-fourth Street.

Coggi was seen to enter a tenement house at 204 East Twenty-sixth Street and was found there hiding in a washroom on the second floor. In the same house in a third floor rear apartment Pryor was found in hiding, although a woman who answered the knocks of the policemen denied that he was there.

As a truck rolled down First Avenue between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Streets Policeman Connell of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, saw Degnan in it, attempting to crawl under some blankets.

John Paul of 322 East 106th Street, formerly a pugilist known as "Kid" Carter, was shot in the right hip last night when he attempted to escape from Detective Duffy. He was recaptured and sent to Bellevue Hospital.

Miss Marion Clarke told in Special Sessions, Brooklyn, yesterday that the drug habit cost her her place as a teacher in a public school in Brooklyn, and that she was compelled to work in a cheap restaurant. On her story, Joseph Belsite, a druggist at 233 Gold Street, Brooklyn, was convicted of failing properly to record the sale of prescriptions containing narcotics. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 or serve ninety days in jail.

Karl Waznidski of 237 West Thirty-fifth Street, who was arrested carrying twelve hypodermic needles and two bottles of morphine, was sent by Magistrate Murphy in the Yorkville Court to the Metropolitan Hospital and held in $500 bail for Special Sessions.

George Bell of 64 West 133d Street and May Freeman of 219 West Twenty-eighth Street, both negroes, were held for Special Sessions by Magistrate Deuel in Jefferson Market Court. Detectives said that the two had sold opium in a flat in West Twenty-eighth Street.

Three men in a lunchroom in Forty-second Street, near Seventh Avenue, were arrested on the charge of possessing narcotics. They said they were George Harris of 331 West Forty-fifth Street, a newsdealer; John Bulkin of 1,392 Franklin Avenue, the Bronx, manager of a restaurant, and John Burney of the People's Lodging House in William Street.

Ruth Moore and V. Herbert, both of 219 West Twenty-eighth Street, and J. Vernon of 356 West Forty-first Street, were held for Special Sessions by Magistrate Deuel in Jefferson Market Court under the Boylan law.

tions. It was one-sided. It permitted standardization only if upward.

"To such provisions of the award as confer benefits upon men whose present rates and conditions merit adjustment we are in hearty accord; to those who, in our judgment, the testimony showed to have been liberally paid and propery treated, we feel that nothing additional is due them, and in agreeing to changes in their rates and rules and to other conditions of the award it was only because it was made apparent that these changes were necessary, if we were to have an award at all. It appeared to us that for the maintenance of the principle of arbitration for the adjustment of labor disputes, which is the public interest, our duty lay in this direction, even though additional burdens of expense result."

Views of the Labor Men.

The dissenting opinion of Messrs. Burgess and Shea contained much argument and evidence used in the hearing, and to which, they contended, the arbitrators paid too little attention, or ignored.

Further discussing the alleged failure of the board to weigh equitably the long hours as against seemingly high pay, the opinion says:

"Surely no act by a Government tribunal could more keenly bring home to the wage-earners of this great country the consideration they might expect if boards under Government control are to adjust their wages and working conditions on such a basis. The whole theory is so repugnant to us that we feel it our duty to advise not only all railroad employes, but every organization of labor, to seek by every influence to secure the revocation of a law that has the smallest tincture of that principle embodied therein, for we believe that the application of such a theory brings us back to the practices and conditions of 200 years ago, and if allowed to flourish and grow will rapidly place the American wage-earner in a condition similar to that of the Mexican peon."

WILSON STOOD BY NAGEL.

Saw No Reason for Removing Him on Employes' Protest.

WASHINGTON, April 30. — President Wilson concluded today that there was no good reason for the withdrawal of Charles Nagel, former Secretary of Commerce and Labor, from the Arbitration Board which handled the wage dispute between the Western railways and their firemen and enginemen because of the railway employes' protest that, as a trustee of the Busch estate of St. Louis, he was interested in railway securities.

The President came to his conclusion after conferences with Federal Judge Martin A. Knapp, Chairman of the Federal Board of Mediation and Conciliation. He took the position that the railroad employes knew Mr. Nagel was a trustee of the Busch estate when he was selected as an arbitrator, and as no protest was made then he saw no reason for his withdrawal now.

CHARGE MADE AGAINST NAGEL.

Brotherhoods Assert He Was Unfitted to Act as Arbitrator.

CHICAGO, April 30.—Charges that Charles Nagel, neutral member of the Board of Arbitration, which today ended its deliberations over the railroads' wage questions, was "a violent partisan," who through indirect business interests in the roads was unfitted to act as a neutral arbitrator, were made tonight by Warren S. Stone, Grand Chief Engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and W. S. Carter, President of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Enginemen and Firemen.

With these charges was made public the telegraphic correspondence the representatives of the men had with President Wilson and Martin E. Knapp, W. L. Chambers and G. W. W. Hanger protesting against Mr. Nagel being permitted to act as an arbitrator.

Protested to the President.

The first telegram from Stone and Carter was on April 26 and was sent to President Wilson and Judges Knapp and Chambers. The copy was simultaneously filed with Peter C. Pritchard, Chairman of the Board of Arbitration here. It noted that Nagel was coexecutor of the Busch estate and listed twenty-one roads of which the estate held stocks and bonds. The estate, it was stated, also is a large holder of stock in the American Car and Foundry Company and of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. By the terms of the will the title to the shares stood in the name of Nagel and Edward A. Faust, his cotrustee. The message closed with a protest against Mr. Nagel acting as neutral arbitrator.

Judge Chambers and Knapp replied April 27 with a telegram urging that the protest be withheld from the board, and when informed it had been submitted, telegraphed urging that it be withdrawn, if possible, that Mr. Nagel should not learn of its having been made.

On the same day personal messages from Knapp and Chambers were received, urging the brotherhoods to act favorably on the official requests of board members. The same night President Wilson telegraphed:

"I join Judge Chambers and Judge Knapp in requesting that you withhold your protest from the Board of Arbitration until I can confer with the former. We shall confer tomorrow morning."

The telegram was acknowledged that night and a reply sent to President Wilson that the representatives of the brotherhood had taken no action since filing the protests with the board.

On April 29 the following message was sent to Messrs. Knapp, Chambers, and Hangar. It was signed by Carter and Stone:

"Please advise by wire quick if you knew prior to Charles Nagel's appointment as arbitrator that he was Trustee of Busch's estate, and that said estate had large holdings of railroad stocks and bonds."

Asserted Nagel Admitted Charges.

Judges Knapp and Chambers replied:

"We cannot recognize the right of any one to ask [illegible] knowledge of the business connection of an arbitrator selected by the board after due notice to the parties of such selection and the acceptance by them of his services."

This was followed by a letter from Stone and Carter to President Wilson and Judges Knapp and Chambers, asserting that Nagel had admitted the Busch charges, and declared also that he was a Director of the Union Trust Company of St. Louis and of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, both of which concerns, the letter charged, were larger holders of railroad securities than the Busch estate. Judge Chambers, the letter said, was cognizant of this before Nagel's appointment. On April 29 the following message was sent by Stone and Carter to Judge Knapp:

"We feel that any influence you are bringing to bear to prevent a deadlock in the arbitration proceedings is very prejudicial to our interests."

Judge Knapp replied:

"I cannot understand the cause or meaning of your telegram. I have scrupulously refrained from doing or saying anything whatever, directly or indirectly, to influence the neutral arbitrators in any respect, either to prevent a deadlock or otherwise."

This morning a message was received by Stone and Carter, signed by Judges Knapp and Chambers, declaring that the members of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation had known Nagel was a Trustee of the Busch Estate, but saying it was not recalled whether any one knew of his being a Director in the St. Louis and Milwaukee companies.

"A knowledge of that fact would have been favorable rather than otherwise to his appointment," the telegram said. "We had no knowledge of what the assets of the Busch estate consisted. You doubtless had as much knowledge of Mr. Nagel's business connections as any of the board prior to his appointment, and you had ample time to make further inquiries before the organization of the arbitration board and the acceptance of his services, and certainly before the extension of the life of the board, which was the act of yourselves by agreement with the railroad representatives, independently of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation.

"The foregoing statement is not made for the purpose of escaping any responsibility on the part of any member or officer of this board for Mr. Nagel's appointment, for nothing was known before his appointment, nor has anything been brought to our knowledge since his appointment which, in our opinion, disqualifies him as an arbitrator, and our confidence in his ability and integrity remains unchanged."

Messrs. Stone and Carter acknowledged this message in a telegram which closed: "We regret that we did not know of your understanding of neutrality before we signed the arbitration agreement. You state, by inference, that we knew of Nagel's railway and corporate connections before his appointment. There is no foundation in fact for any such inference. We relied on your board to protect the interests of both parties by the appointment of two neutral arbitrators."

A statement by the publicity department of the brotherhoods recited that the law firm of which Mr. Nagel is a member, had acted as counsel for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and numerous railway interests, and charged that in 1900 he had been sworn as Deputy Sheriff and had organized a posse which was active in the riot zone in the St. Louis street car strike.

Mr. Nagel, before leaving for St. Louis tonight, asserted that his business associations had been of public record for [illegible] argument between counsel, the Justice said the lawyers were wasting too much time.

Mr. Barnes's counsel fought hard to keep out of the record the evidence concerning the Albany printing ring, and the Bayne report dealing with it. The Roosevelt forces started to introduce the matter this afternoon. They put on the stand Michael V. Dolan of The Albany Argus Company to prove that Mr. Barnes, who owned some stock in the company, and The Albany Journal Company had a working agreement by which they received double profits on State printing.

Mr. Ivins said he did not expect to call Governor Whitman as a witness. He said he understood Mr. Whitman had admitted that he had received the Duell letter, and that so long as its authenticity was not in doubt there would be no need of dragging the Governor into the case.

Feared the Limelight.

Royal W. France started off by saying that Mr. Barnes, when State Chairman of the Republican Party, had sent a message to the President of the Brooklyn Young Republican Club in December, 1911, arranging for an interview at the Republican State headquarters in West Thirty-ninth Street.

"I saw Mr. Barnes there," said the witness. "He said he had sent for me to discuss the subject of direct primaries; that he had opposed the Hinman-Greene bill, and thought the attitude of the Brooklyn Young Republican Club in favoring it had been wrong.

"Legislation of this character, he told me, was not practical because it exposed the candidates to too much publicity, and that the double campaign which it brought about threw too much limelight on the candidates, and that he could ruin the reputation of any man living if he threw too much limelight on it.

"I told him that because he held such views was one of the reasons why we disagreed with him, and that we believed there were any number of men whose reputations would stand any amount of limelight, and that they were the kind of men that we wanted to get into office.

"He said to me that he could show up the foolishness of the whole proposition anyway. He said he could get the riffraff of the Democratic party in Albany and vote them in the Republican primaries or vote the Republicans in the Democratic primaries and name such rotten candidates that he could disgust the voters with the whole thing.

"He told me the direct primary system was subversive of party organization and that party organization was necessary to the maintenance of our institutions. I told him that we were not so much interested in party organization as such as we were in the people having a more direct control over the machinery of Government."

On cross-examination Mr. Ivins did not attempt to break down the witness's statements, but asked him if it was not a fact that the meeting had been arranged to talk over the so-called Blauvelt primary bill, which was then in force, and which subsequently was repealed. Mr. France said that, while something had been said about this bill when the interview was arranged, the topic dissed was the defeat of the Hinman-Greene bill and that the conversation was based almost entirely on that subject.

The Colonel Is Happy.

Colonel Roosevelt plainly showed the satisfaction he felt at the witness's testimony.

When Mr. France was excused, Mr. Van Benschoten called Herbert H. Vreeland to the stand hoping to get before the jury evidence that as president of the Metropolitan Securities Company, the holding company for the New York City Railroads, in 1903 Mr. Vreeland had contributed $20,000 to the State campaign funds of both the Republican and Democratic parties.

Mr. Vreeland was apparently perfectly willing to tell what he knew about such facts, but counsel for Mr. Barnes objected, first on the ground that it had not been established that Mr. Barnes was then a dominant figure in the Republican party, and second, that simply to show such contributions were made by a corporation to both parties was not competent evidence bearing on the allegation that such money was given for corrupt purposes, or that a corrupt alliance between the politics and business existed.

In answer to the objection Mr. Van Benschoten said he expected to show that contributions were made by Mr. Vreeland to both the Republican State Committee and to Mr. Murphy as head of the Democratic party.

"But are you going to show in addition," asked the court, "that the contributions were made under an agreement for protection and with the knowledge of Mr. Barnes?"

"We intend to show that they were made for a purpose," replied Van Benschoten.

"Of course you will understand that there are difficulties in our way for such things are not put down at the time in black and white, and perhaps are not even mentioned orally. But when we find a big corporation contributing to both party organizations, I think we have the right to show that. And I assume that his Honor was sufficiently versed in the public affairs of the State to know what was going on generally."

Vreeland Is Amused.

During this argument Mr. Vreeland sat with a smile on his face, and obviously getting a lot of quiet enjoyment out of the picture the attorney was drawing.

Mr. Van Benschoten continued to argue that it had been shown by the testimony of Colonel Roosevelt that in a conversation with Mr. Barnes prior to the time of the Vreeland contributions the question of corporations subscribing to both parties in order to obtain protection had been taken up.

Mr. Ivins objected that nothing had been produced, however, to show that in 1903 Barnes was a dominant figure in the Republican Party of the State, or Murphy leader of the Democratic Party.

"Why, in 1903, Barnes was Chairman of the Executive Committee, not Chairman of the State Committee," said Mr. Ivins. "He was like an office boy, opening letters and handling those who came in from the newspapers to get advertisements. The committee was run by Mr. Platt, Mr. Odell, Mr. Dunn, and others. But Mr. Barnes has grown since then, Sir, and now is an older man than you."

Finally Mr. Van Benschoten asked the witness if he had contributed to the Republican State Committee in 1903, and the court allowed him to reply.

"I did," he said. "I gave $20,000."

"Did you make a contribution to Mr. Murphy?"

Before he could reply, Mr. Vreeland was choked off by a volley of objections, which were sustained by the court.

Mr. Vreeland said he gave the money to Lemuel E. Quigg, who was then a member of the Republican County Committee, and also an employe of his company. He was asked if the money was sent to Mr. Odell and the State Committee.

"I don't know where it went," he said. "I gave it to Mr. Quigg to convey to the State Committee."

"Did you ever give any money to Barnes?"

"I don't know Mr. Barnes."

Mr. Vreeland was then excused.

The effort to show that a combination was formed between machine Republicans under Barnes and machine Democrats under Murphy to defeat the direct primary legislation favored by Governor Hughes, and to elect a United States Senator to succeed Mr. Depew was taken up in earnest when ex-State Senator Harvey D. Hinman was sworn. Mr. Hinman spoke in a slow, even voice. He looked frequently at Mr. Barnes and then at Colonel Roosevelt. Those who heard him were impressed with the idea that he was not pleased with his job.

The Sheehan Fight.

Mr. Hinman was questioned about the United States Senatorship fight in 1911. At the opening of the fight, he said, Mr. Depew was the leading Republican candidate and William F. Sheehan the choice of the machine Democrats. The Independent Democratic vote thrown against Sheehan in the long series of ballots which followed, he said, varied from 15 to 25.

The record of each vote from Jan. 11, 1911, to March 31, was then read, to show how certain Democrats refused them and had aided in preventing the election of Edward F. Shepard or another Independent Democrat. The inquiry along this line ended with the reading of the final vote when Mr. O'Gorman was substituted for Mr. Sheehan as a compromise candidate, and was elected over Depew by a vote of 112 to 80.

A sharp tilt followed when Mr. Hinman was asked if in 1910 he had introduced what was known as the Hinman-Greene direct primary legislation and whether that was the bill Governor Hughes had favored. Mr. Van Benschoten said it was his intention to show that the Tammany Democrats and the machine Republicans voted as one body and that the bill was defeated.

"It seems to me," he said, "that we are entitled to lay before this jury enough evidence to show that Governor Hughes favored it."

"Governor Hughes is on the Supreme Court Bench and not subject to subpoena," said Mr. Ivins. "It was not his legislation. It was the Hinman-Greene bill."

The court ruled that the evidence must be limited to facts tending to show that there was a combination of Democrats and Republicans to defeat the measure.

Mr. Van Benschoten said that he wanted to show that Colonel Roosevelt had had a conversation with Mr. Barnes and that Mr. Barnes had said he would oppose the legislation of Governor Hughes. Another involved legal discussion was started and the court interrupted:

"I think," said Justice Andrews, "that we must assume some things. We must hurry on with this case."

"I don't think it is a matter of time," retorted Mr. Van Benschoten.

"I did not mean that I wished to hasten any one unnecessarily," said the Justice, "but we should do away with useless waste of time."

Mr. Hinman then testified that the Hinman-Greene bill was introduced and came up for consideration and was defeated, 23 to 25. He had started off to read a list of the Senators who voted when Mr. Ivins objected.

"I object unless this is connected with Mr. Barnes in some way," he said.

"I will admit the answer," said Justice Andrews, "but I want to say that at the close of the case either side may move to strike out any evidence to which they object, and I will give a ruling then."

Mr. Hinman said two Democrats and twenty-one Republicans had voted for the bill and that thirteen Republicans and twelve Democrats had opposed it.

Mr. Van Benschoten let this statement tell its own story to the jury as the defense saw it and asked the witness:

"Prior to July, 1914, when the article on which this suit was brought was written, did you have a talk with the defendant about this action by the Senate?"

"I did," he replied.

Meade-Phillips Bill.

"I don't think your defendant needs corroboration, does he?" asked Mr. Ivins, referring to the fact that Colonel Rosevelt in his testimony had told the jury of such a conversation.

"I don't Sir," retorted Mr. Van Benschoten, "he never did and he never will."

Then, apparently satisfied with the outcome of that exchange of pleasantries, he abandoned the subject.

The introduction of the Meade-Phillips primary bill, a measure substituted by the opponents of the Hinman-Greene bill, which was adopted and vetoed by Governor Hughes, was then taken up. Mr. Hinman was asked if he remembered the final action on the bill on May 25, 1910, and he said he did.

"The measure was passed by a vote of 28 to 21," he said.

Mr. Van Benschoten then introduced the fact that twenty Republicans and one Democrat voted against the bill, and fourteen Republicans and fourteen Democrats voted for it. He asked the court to let him put in evidence a message sent in at the time by Governor Hughes, in which the Governor told the Legislature he could not sign the bill. The message was ruled out, but the witness was permitted to testify that such a message was sent to the Legislature. The testimony then took up the special session called in June, 1910, for the further consideration of direct primary legislation.

Mr. Hinman said that at the regular session Senator Cobb had introduced the Cobb direct primary bill. At the special session a bill of a similar nature, which was generally spoken of as the Cobb bill, was introduced from the judiciary committee. The Cobb bill, he said, was considered a compromise bill.

"Was Governor Hughes opposed to it?" he was asked.

This started another dispute, and the court interrupted.

"Apparently what you are asking the jury to believe," he said, "is that anybody who opposed Governor Hughes did something which was improper. You seek to show that he was a man of high character and standing, and therefore should be supported. That is your purpose?"

"What we want to show," said Mr. Van Benschoten, "is that the plaintiff said to the defendant that he was opposed to legislation of the kind Mr. Hughes favored. Then we want to show that there was a combination of Democrats and Republicans to beat it."

"But the fact that the Republicans voted with the Democrats, without anything further, is not even a prima facie case that they did what was wrong."

So Mr. Van Benschoten dropped that line and went on.

"Was a caucus of the Republican members called for June 30, 1910?" asked Mr. Van Benschoten.

Mr. Hinman explained that the Cobb bill was up for consideration at a special session and that there had been a caucus arranged. He added:

"There was a vote taken that day on the so-called Cobb bill, and then there was a row—a discussion, I mean—over the adoption of a motion to adjourn."

"I object to it," said Mr. Ivins. "At that time the defendant was in Africa."

"But the plaintiff was there," said Mr. Van Benschoten.

The resolution was that the Legislature adjourn without date at 2 o'clock, said Hinman.

Grattan of Albany moved the adoption, and it was adopted, 24 to 23.

Mr. Van Benschoten then turned back to the session on May 25, 1910, when the Meade-Phillipps bill, which Governor Hughes refused to sign, was passed. The lawyer endeavored to show that the vote for a caucus had been defeated so that the machine Senators who were voting with the Democrats would not be bound by any caucus action in favor of legislation desired by Mr. Hughes.

On the cross-examination Mr. Ivins first asked Mr. Hinman if he had frequently voted on the side of the Democrats.

"I have," he said.

"Did you regard that action as evidence of corruption on your part?"

"I did not."

"Did you consider the fact that any of these other gentlemen voted with the Democrats as evidence of corruption on their parts?"

"Not that in itself. No."

"Is is not a fact in connection with these bills that some of the Democratic Senators who voted against them are not known as Tammany Democrats?"

"I believe that is true of Senator Gardner and perhaps one other Senator."

Then Mr. Ivins switched to the United States Senatorship fight.

"Who did you vote for in that fight to elect a Senator. Was it Mr. Depew, the Republican candidate?" he asked.

"I voted for Mr. Depew throughout," replied Mr. Hinman.

"Did you think that by so voting you joined with the Democrats in a corrupt act?"

"I did not."

That is all, said Mr. Ivins, as he retired smiling.

Hennessy on the Stand.

John A. Hennessy was the last witness at the morning session. He said he was appointed Executive auditor by Governor Sulzer. He was asked if he had been directed to examine the State Architect's office and when the trouble began.

After Mr. Ivins had entered an objection, Justice Andrews asked if much time could not be saved by submitting a stipulation concerning what was admitted by both sides as to the conditions in the State at the time Mr. Hennessy made his investigations.

"Before this case opened," said Mr. Van Benschoten, "we wrote to the plaintiff's attorneys and asked if such a stipulation could be agreed upon."

He then took from his pocket a copy of the letter and read it to the court. In it the Barnes attorneys had been asked to agree that there was a riot of corruption during the years 1911, 1912, 1913, and 1914, and that the corruption extended to the Executive, Legislative, Highway, and Prison departments; that contracts were let without bids; that contractors were blackmailed, useless offices created, the civil service system debauched, and offices bartered for political purposes.

At the close of the letter was a paragraph in which the defendant's counsel that it would not be charged that the plaintiff Barnes was a direct party to any of the conditions set forth or profited personally in any way thereby.

Mr. Ivins said he was willing to admit that the corruption existed during the four years of Democratic administration, but that he had refused to agree to any stipulation before the case was brought into court.

"I am willing to stipulate that the State Government was as corrupt under Democratic administration as they could very well make it," said Mr. Ivins with a smile. "In fact, I wrote that portion of the Republican State platform which set forth such facts, and I will stand by anything I said then."

"Counsel for the defense made this honeyed confession in the proposed stipulation that it would not be claimed that Mr. Barnes was directly responsible for any of the conditions in the State Government at the time. But even though the bait was loaded with honey I could accept it. I didn't want the honey: I want the proof."

Mr. Van Benschoten repeated his offer to agree upon a stipulation freeing Mr. Barnes from direct blame, except in connection with the alleged printing ring at Albany. The court suggested that this course be followed in so far as it related to the things which Mr. Hennessy might be able to tell in connection with the State departments, and this was at last agreed upon. Mr. Ivins, however, taking an exception to Mr. Van Benschoten's statement about the printing ring.

"Well, then, Mr. Hennessy," said the lawyer, "I have but one more question to ask you. Did you prior to July, 1914, have a talk with the defendant about what you discovered?"

An objection, on the ground that Colonel Roosevelt had already testified that such a conversation took place and that corroboration was unnecessary, was made by Mr. Ivins, and Mr. Hennessy was excused from further testimony.

Mr. Hinman was called to the stand at the beginning of the afternoon session and asked to describe the Hinman-Greene and the Meade-Phillips Primary bills. The first named bill, he said, abolished the convention system, created political committees, and divided the ballot into two parts, so that it provided for the selection of candidates to public office and candidates to party positions. The Meade-Phillips bill, he said, retained the convention and provided for the selection of delegates at the primaries, besides retaining the party emblem.

On cross-examination, Mr. Hinman described the Blauvelt bill, which, he said, was different from the other two. He said it had been on the statute books for two years and was then repealed. He said he had voted against it, as did all the other Republican Senators, and that ended his testimony.

Barnes with Tammany Men.

The next witness was Henry C. McMillan of The New York Evening Post, who was a correspondent at Albany for The New York Evening Mail in 1910. He was asked to tell about what he had witnessed at the meeting of the passage of the Meade-Phillips Primary bill on May 25, 1910, and at the special session of the Legislature on June 30 of the same year. He said that on June 30, 1910, he saw Mr. Barnes in the office of the Senate Clerk with Senator Grady, Senator James J. Frawley, both Tammany Senators, and Senators Grattan and Emerson. He said he saw all of these men pass back and forth from the Senate chamber, where Mr. Barnes held forth in the Clerk's office.

"What did Grattan do that evening on the floor of the Senate?" asked Mr. Van Benschoten.

"He was apparently acting as a messenger for Barnes," the witness replied.

Mr. Ivins objected to this remark and it was stricken out.

Mr. McMillan was asked what part Senator Grattan had taken in his vote on the joint resolution to adjourn that evening. He said he remembered that Mr. Grattan had asked the Clerk to announce the result of the vote.

Ex-Senator Frederick M. Davenport, who proved to be one of the Colonel's strongest witnesses, took the stand. He was the Bull Moose candidate for Governor in 1914. He said he recalled that the Hinman-Greene bill was defeated in 1910, and then he was asked about the Republican caucus at the time the Meade-Phillips bill came up on May 25 of that year.

"What occurred during the recess?" the witness was asked.

"I walked out into the corridor between the Clerk's room and the Senate chamber," he replied, "and saw Senator Grady go into the library. I saw Mr. Barnes go into the Clerk's room, where he met a number of machine and organization Senators. I went to the door of the room and saw the Senators passing in and out of the room where Barnes was.

Taking up the special session of the Legislature on June 30, the witness was asked if he had seen Mr. Barnes in the lobby of the Senate at that time. He replied: "I did. Mr. Grattan, the Senator from the Albany district, and I were having a colloquy about the plaintiff as he stood at the entrance of the Senate Chamber. We could look in and see and hear what was going on. The colloquy was a debate on the floor of the Senate, and was heard and seen by everybody there. Senator Grattan was denouncing Governor Hughes and Mr. Roosevelt and other Republican leaders for their actions in trying to force through the direct primary legislation. That was Senator Grattan's point of view."

Duell Is Ejected.

Then the witness told about comparing Barnes to a political Nero who fiddled while Rome was burning. It was at this point also that Mr. Duell was ejected from the courtroom. After the excitement over the clash between the witness and Mr. Ivins had subsided Mr. Ivins asked Mr. Davenport if he had ever consulted with Mr. Barnes regarding political matters in the State after Barnes had become Chairman of the Republican State Committee. He said he remembered having one talk with Barnes in 1912. He said he and Barnes were members of the Union League Club, and while he talked with him some times it was not about politics.

Mr. Ivins referred again to what the witness had meant by his phrase of the "community sense of right."

He said: "This movement for reform was sweeping across the entire country and the whole people were interested. It was a community sense of democracy, and I acted in accordance with it."

He said he had ben a member of the Assembly in 1902 and 1904, and had also served in the Senate four years beginning in 1906. He also remembered all about the fight over the primary legislation in 1910, and was asked about a debate he had with Senator Grattan on the motion to adjourn on the night of June 30.

"I made the charge in the course of debate," said Mr. Newcomb, "that a bi-partisan combination had been formed to defeat the Hughes primary legislation by means of the motion to adjourn. I charged Senator Grady and Senator Grattan with forming a Democratic and Republican combination. Grattan replied 'All right, Senator, that we admit, but you are only sore because we put it across on you.'"

Mr. Ivins asked the witness if he remembered meeting Mr. Barnes after his election as Republican State Chairman. He said he had seen him in the Spring of 1911.

"Were you a candidate for the Chairmanship of the New York County Committee?" asked Mr. Ivins.

Slap at Murphy.

Roscoe Irwin of Kingston, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Albany district, was then called. He said he was active in politics in Ulster County.

"Do you know Charles F. Murphy?" he was asked.

"I do," he replied. "I have known him since 1910."

"Have you ever had occasion to see him in regard to political matters in connection with the Democratic party in the State?"

"I have."

"Did you discuss with him appointments made by Governor Dix?"

"I did."

Mr. Ivins objected when the witness was asked to tell about these conversations. He said he would not admit that Mr. Murphy was the Democratic leader or that he dominated the party.

"If Mr. Ivins admits that Mr. Murphy was leader it is all right," said Attorney Bowers.

"I won't admit it at all," said Mr. Ivins.

There was a wrangle between the two lawyers at this point as to whether Mr. Bowers did not know Mr. Murphy very well himself.

"I never saw Murphy but twice in my life," said Mr. Bowers.

The discussion still went on as to what the Mr. Murphy was dominant influence in the Democratic party. Finally Mr. Ivins blurted out:

"I will admit that he was dominant excepting for those years when he was overcome and was dominated by Mr. Hearst."

The court said that counsel would probably admit that Mr. Murphy was prominent in the Democratic party in the State.

"I admit that he is not unknown," said Mr. Ivins.

The witness admitted he had consulted Mr. Murphy as one of the party leaders, but he could not tell whether Mr. Murphy had favored any appointments he had discussed with him or not.

This witness is too good natured to cross-examine," said Mr. Ivins, and he was excused.

The last witness of the day was Michael V. Dolan, who is connected with the Argus Printing Company of Albany, in which concern Mr. Barnes is said to have owned fifteen per cent. of the stock.

Mr. Ivins objected to the admission of any evidence concerning Albany printing matters. Justice Andrews, seeing a long fight in progress, excused the jury and for the next hour the opposing counsel argued the matter.

John J. Adams, the libel expert, did most of the talking for the Barnes side. He argued that the testimony should not be admitted, on the ground that it did not tend to prove justification of the libel and that no charge of corruption had been made against Mr. Barnes's newspaper or any of the other Albany printing concerns. He claimed that the same ruling which excluded evidence of vice and gambling in Albany should apply to Albany printing contracts.

"No matter what profits Barnes is supposed to have made," said Mr. Adams, "there is nothing to prove that anything is wrong with the contracts, and there is no rule which charged a Director with being responsible merely because he is a stockholder."

Printing Contracts Up.

"I believe that both sides take too technical a view of the article," said Justice Andrews. "I believe it is competent to admit this evidence, and I am going to allow it in."

At this point there was another long argument as to whether the evidence should be admitted on the ground as referred to city and county matters and not to the State.

"I will admit it," ruled the Justice, "as going further than the mere showing of fraud in these printing contracts or that Mr. Barnes knew it was a fraud. Mr. Bowers, however, will have to show that the contracts were a result of a combination of crooked business and crooked politics. I do not think that I will discriminate between State, county, and city in regard to this printing business."

The jury was recalled and Mr. Dolan told how his firm had obtained contracts for legislative printing since 1880. This included departmental and legislative printing and the session laws. He said two other concerns in Albany did the same kind of work—the J. B. Lyon Company and the Brandow Company. The Journal Company, owned by Mr. Barnes, he said, did not have a job printing plant, and the Argus Company did most of the printing for it.

He said he had dealt mostly with Mr. Lindsey, the General Manager of the Journal Company, and that he had never transacted business with Mr. Barnes himself.

In 1912, he said, he had let the whole contract to the J. B. Lyon Company. In 1903, however, his firm had done about four-fifths of the printing.

Asked if he had submitted a bid on the actual cost of every item, the witness said he did not think it a fair question, but when ordered to answer by the court he said:

"I bid sometimes to lose and sometimes to win. Once my bid was 1 cent a thousand, and it cost 40 cents a thousand to do the work."

Mr. Bowers produced some of the firm's books to show how much profit had been made by the Albany company. The witness admitted that he had made a profit on the 1912 bid, because the Lyon Company did the work for less than the amount of the original bid.

The Legislature printing, the witness said, consisted of calendars of the day and printing of the Assembly bills. He admitted that if but a single word was changed in the various bills his company made a second charge for the entire composition. Some of the bills, he said, were printed six or eight times, but the witness explained that this was taken into consideration in making the bid.

Mr. Bowers then switched to the printing of the Common Council minutes of Albany City. The witness testified that his firm had the printing of these minutes for 1909 and 1910, and that each year they had printed 600 copies of each article. The witness admitted that at other times, when the Journal Company had the contract for printing the Common Council minutes, his firm had made an arrangement to do its work on a basis of paying to the Journal Company 15 per cent. of the amount of the original contract work, and 20 to 25 per cent. for all duplicate work.

This duplicate work, the witness explained, meant the reprinting of various sections of the minutes or reports.

"After 1911, that is, after the Bayne report was published, was any double printing done?" asked Mr. Bowers.

The witnes replied that there was not.

"Why did you make a contract with the Journal Company?" the witness was asked.

"For speculation," he replied.

"If extra reports had to be printed why did you not go to the city officials and get them yourself instead of getting them from the Journal Company?" asked Mr. Bowers.

"I didn't think it would do any good," said the witness with a smile.

"Then you gave up money to the Journal Company in order to get the printing?" Mr. Bowers wanted to know.

An objection to this question by Mr. Ivins was sustained.

"Did you make a contract with the Journal Company because it controlled where the city printing went?"

This question also was not allowed. Nor was a question asked by Mr. Bowers as to why the witness had stopped the double printing after the Bayne report was published.

Several volumes of printing reports on common council meetings were put in evidence.

It was now 5 o'clock, and Justice Andrews ordered an adjournment until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

WHITMAN WILL NOT TESTIFY.

But Says He Wrote Duell Letter and Stands By It.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 30.—Gov. Whitman will not be a witness at the Barnes-Roosevelt trial. He denied today that he had received any request from William M. Ivins, counsel for William Barnes, to take the stand at Syracuse. Friends of the Governor say that under the law he cannot be forced to answer a subpoena, and that it would be most unwise for him to become involved in the controversy.

"I wrote the Duell letter introduced at the trial yesterday," said the Governor. "And in the same situation I would write the same letter now. I do not retract anything I said in it. The letter to Mr. Duell signed with my full name and read yesterday, is mine; that signed 'C. S. W.' was not written by me."

Asked if in his letter to Mr. Duell he had referred to Mr. Barnes's influence when he spoke of ridding the State of undesirable party control, the Governor smiled and turned to other business.

HOSPITAL COOK POISONED.

Bichloride of Mercury Tablets Were in Magnesia Bottle.

The Department of Health discovered yesterday that bichloride of mercury tablets were, by mistake, placed in a bottle marked magnesia tablets in the Willard Parker Hospital last Wednesday and caused the serious illness of a cook, Sadie Danielson, 31 years old, who is now dangerously ill in Bellevue Hospital.

According to a report made by Dr. Robert A. Wilson, Director of Hospitals, to Deputy Health Commissioner Emerson, the cook, who has been in the institution for a long time, asked for some magnesia tablets when she felt ill on Wednesday, and received from a waitress of the institution, a bottle marked magnesia tablets from the medicine closet.

The officials refused to discuss the matter until yesterday, when the Deputy Commissioner received his report on the case. The responsibility for the error

RED CROSS AID FOR AUSTRIA

Hospital Shipment Sails Today—Gifts to Other Funds.

The Red Cross is shipping on the White Star liner Canopic, which sails for Italian ports today, 359 cases and bales of hospital supplies and garments, consigned to the Austro-Hungarian Red Cross at Vienna. The consignment weighs 60,000 pounds and is valued at $20,500. The greater part of this shipment consists of specially designated gifts from the German Friendly Society, Cincinnati; the German Austro-Hungarian Red Cross Society, Chicago; the Austro-Hungarian Red Cross, Baltimore; from the Polish Relief Society, the Special Relief Committee, the Central Club for Nurses, the Czech Relief Association of New York, and from many other societies and individuals throughout the United States.

The Red Cross Fund was increased by $282.54 yesterday, and the fund in New York now totals $400,590.45. Subscriptions should be sent to Jacob H. Schiff, Treasurer, 120 East Twenty-second Street. The gifts of $10 or more follow:

For Relief in France.

Contributions received yesterday by Mrs. Whitney Warren of 15 East Fortyseventh Street for the relief of destitute women and children in France, amounted to $95, making the total $24,729.18. Mrs. B. F. Browne gave $5.00.

Central Would Enjoin Commuters.

In an effort to prevent a trading traffic in commutation tickets, the New York Central Railroad Company brought an injunction suit yesterday in the Federal District Court against Theodore Brown, a barber of 29 Second Street, Newburgh, and seventeen other commuters on the West Shore line. The railroad asks that they be restrained from selling or transferring monthly or any other non-transferable form of commutation tickets, and from soliciting, encouraging or procuring any person to get them from their original purchases. The complaint is made by Edward L. Rossiter, Treasurer of the railroad company, and was filed by Alexander S. Lyman, its counsel.

Broadway and Thirty-third Street

The May White Sale

$150,000 Worth of French and Domestic Undermuslins, Crepe de Chine Lingerie, Negligees, Silk Petticoats, Corsets, House Dresses, Blouses, Neckwear, Children's and Infants' Wear—at Savings of 20 to 40 Per Cent.

Foresightedness

There would not be a May White Sale at GIMBELS if we had not had exceptional foresight.

But our foresight has brought about a greater White Sale than we have ever had before. Moreover,

A White Sale That Is Phenomenal
In a Year When All the World Needs Cotton

Our foresightedness not only made us anticipate the increase in the price of Cotton, but it caused us to "corner" Imported Laces and Embroideries. For, as you undoubtedly know, many of the mills that made them have been destroyed.

Our foresightedness made us realize that the scarcity of trimmings would cause Paris to change styles in lingerie. And it did. Our Paris Bureau sent us these new models, which express the greatest simplicity, and we have had them copied for this Sale.

Our foresightedness told us that the prices of French Lingerie would increase, because of the scarcity of materials and the depression among the workers. Prices did increase, but we had placed our orders beforehand. The result is that we are enabled to present—

French Lingerie

Hand-Embroidered Chemises, 55c and $1
Hand-Embroidered Drawers, 55c and $1
Hand-Embroidered Nightgowns, $1.50
Hand-Embroidered Petticoats, $1

We are positive that these prices will not be duplicated in New York today—and we are sure that it will be several years before they can be repeated, for French Lingerie has already increased 35% in price.

Our style foresight is in evidence throughout the sale, from the Petticoats with hoops, to the Blouses with frills.

Hurry!—Men's Suits at $15.

A Quick May-Day Moving

These suits can be worn 'way into the Summer, for the materials are such as will prove serviceable from now on.

As to quality, style and smartness, $20 and $25 suits have nothing on these. The variety of models, fabrics, patterns and colorings is broad enough to please any man, no matter what his inclination.

There are rolling and plain lapels, patch or regular pocket, quarter and half linings.

Fourth Floor

Men's $5 to $6 Silk Shirts, $3.65

They have been causing a furore among men who know good silk shirts when they see them. And we know that they are by far the best values in town, because the qualities of the silks are superb.

The wonderful array of patterns furnishes a wide choice for every man. Besides gay, there are plenty of white-and-black effects. All with plain bosoms, soft French cuffs and pearl buttons.

SUFFRAGE LEADERS FEAR LEGAL TANGLE

They Hear Drafters of Constitution May Omit Order on Votes for Women Amendment.

SAY MEMBERS ARE PLEDGED

Mrs. Catt Insists Both Root and Barnes Agreed to Give Them "Fair and Square Test."

Suffragists were very much alarmed yesterday over the news from Albany that the Constitutional Convention might not, after all, submit to voters next November a referendum permitting them to decide whether they want woman's suffrage.

The question that chiefly worried workers in the various suffrage headquarters was whether the Constitutional Convention would pass the resolution brought forward by Herbert Parsons and so far given but scant attention. It was plain from their remarks that they regarded Mr. Parsons as the advocate of their cause, and looked upon his resolution as one most essential to pass before there would be any assurance of a "fair and square test" of the suffrage question before the people this Fall.

Opposition to the Parsons resolution was plainly an unexpected development and one calculated to throw their whole Summer's campaign out of order. It was said that Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch was busy last night preparing a letter to delegates to the Constitutional Convention, in which she proposed to explain to them the obligations under which she believed they rested to bring through a woman's suffrage referendum in "good faith for a fair and square test."

In this letter it was said that Mrs. Blatch would hold that every prominent leader, from William Barnes to Elihu Root, Chairman of the Constitutional Convention, was bound by pledges made during the last campaign to see the suffrage referendum "fairly and squarely treated in the Constitutional Convention."

The whole trouble, it seemed, was due to the fact that the Constitution written by members of the convention will go to the voters in November as an entirely new document. Suffrage leaders expect that it would repeat the language of the present Constitution upon the question of the right to vote, limiting the privilege to males who are qualified.

But if the referendum passed by two Legislatures were submitted without any action of any kind by the Constitutional Convention it would fall under a clause of the Constitution which provided that action by the Constitutional Convention superceded and invalidated previous legislation. Thus the women leaders fear that if their amendment should pass this Fall and was submitted without indorsement by the Constitutional Convention the courts might hold that amended the old Constitution which would perish with the adoption of a new one, and so would not have any force in the future.

Demand Parsons Resolution.

Nearly every suffragist who cared to be quoted on the matter yesterday demanded that the Parsons resolution be passed "without quibbling by the Constitutional Convention," and that the suffrage question be allowed to rest there.

Assertions that the leading members of the Constitutional Convention, including Mr. Barnes and Chairman Root, are pledged to the passage of the Parsons resolution, or to a line of action which the resolution is meant to carry out, were freely made in suffrage circles yesterday.

When reporters attempted to find out on what authority these assertions were made they were referred to Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Empire State Campaign Committee; Mrs. Raymond Brown, President of the New York State Women's Suffrage Association, and Miss Mary Garrett Hay, Chairman of the Women's Suffrage Party of New York City. Mrs. Catt, Mrs. Brown, and Miss Hay confirmed the rumors that they had exacted personal pledges from Mr. Root and Mr. Barnes, "and expected them to redeem their pledges."

"It is vitall yessential to the cause of suffrage," said Mrs. Catt, "that the Parsons resolution or a similar resolution pass. We do not see how the Constitutional Convention can possibly avoid its obligation to pass such a resolution and still claim that it is acting in good faith. Opposition to the resolution has no rightful purpose, and I cannot believe that it is general or permanent.

"We have not proceeded in this matter without a very carefully worked out plan of procedure. We knew that a resolution passed by the Legislature would be superceded by the action of the Constitutional Convention. That was way we pledged the candidates of all parties to the Constitutional Convention to a purpose to submit the suffrage amendment in a clean-cut manner to the voters."

Say Members are Pledged.

"Was Chairman Root and was Mr. Mr. Barnes so pledged?" Mrs. Catt was asked.

"Yes, they were," she answered, "and so was Herbert Parsons and a majority of the members of the Constitutional Convention. We had the matter carefully looked up and we found that it would suffice if the Constitutional Convention should pass a resolution ordering the suffrage amendment as passed by the two Legislatures in succession, into the Constitutional in case it should pass at the November election.

"We wanted a fair and square test—just that and nothing more. Leaders of both big parties insisted that they wanted a fair test. So before we let the matter go to a final vote in the Legislature we decided on the program that the Parsons resolution will carry out.

"There is no confusion and no complaint and no tangle—if the Parsons resolution passes. But if the Convention should refuse to pass it, then, of course, the situation would be serious. I should say the duty of the Constitutional Convention is almost automatic and mechanical. Its duty is to make a record of the fact that it is willing to have the will of the people on the suffrage matter, as expressed at next Fall's election, pass into the new Constitution.

"Would the suffragists favor the submission of the suffrage amendment to the people as part of the constitution itself?" Mrs. Catt was asked.

"No they would not," she answered, "I see that there has been some suggestion that the Convention debate the matter of whether or not to provide for women's suffrage in the Constitution itself. We hope no such debate takes place, and that no such action occurs. It would complicate a matter that has been mapped out along certain satisfactory lines. And it would open the way for all sorts of complications that are now in a way to be avoided.

"All we want is the Parsons resolution validating for the Constitution the result of the election by the people, whatever the result may be. Then, when voters go into the booths next November, they will vote once as to whether they approve the Constitution drafted for them, and once again as to whether they are in favor of woman suffrage. We want our issue kept separate for a clear-cut treatment of its own.'

"I personally went to Albany," said Miss Hay at the headquarters of the Woman Suffrage Party of New York City in Fifth Avenue, "and I personally pledged Senator Wagner, and Herbert Parsons, and Mr. Root, and quite a number of others to see the suffrage amendment through in a fair and square way, so that the people might decide upon it strictly on its merits. I favor the Parsons resolution, that some members of the convention seem to oppose, because it makes the only declaration we want the Constitutional Convention to make—a declaration to let the people's votes decide the issue and accept into the new Constitution the decision as rendered at the polls. We shall consider as trickery and unfair dealing any decision other than this, and shall act accordingly."

Mrs. Brown Not Worrying.

Mrs. Raymond Brown discusser the matter at her home in West Ninety-second Street last night.

"We are not worrying about the situation," she said, "because we have every faith in the pledges made by the leaders of the Constitutional Convention. Their assurances that they would give us a square deal were 'scraps of paper' unless they meant to pass some such resolution as the Parsons resolution. I notice they have spoken of Mr. Parsons as one who 'was rocking the boat.' Such an idea could not be an honest one, for Mr. Parsons merely intended to permit us to have honest referendum. I am sure the convention members will rally to the resolution when they fully understand it and will not try to batch up any substitute. We want only one suffrage amendment to go before the people this Fall, and we want it to go in separate from the constitution itself."

Mrs. Inez Milholland-Bossevain was not nearly so certain as some of her co-workers in the suffrage sause that the Constitutional Convention could legally make an "order to bring the suffrage amendment into the new constitution, if it should pass at the Fall election.

"It is all a new and rather startling issue," said Mrs. Boissevain, "and I am going to look up the constitutional authorities upon it very carefully. It is too bad that the people will have to pass on a suffrage amendment and upon a new constitution that will not provide for woman's suffrage upon the same occasion. It would be very easy to complicate that matter and defeat the suffrage cause, although the amendment might be indorsed at the polls."

Mrs. Henry Bruere, wife of City Chamberlain Bruere, said that she had waited "so long to vote and had worked so hard to get the matter submitted to the people that it was quite surprising to find there was still a chance for a hitch in the program."

"All we can do," said Mrs. Bruere, "is to trust our leaders and work under their suggestions and orders. I know that this matter has been in competent hands and that Mrs. Catt and Mrs. Blatch and the others would not assert that the Republican leaders were pledged if they were not pledged. I want to see the suffrage amendment submitted in the exact form in which it passed the two Legislatures, and I want to see it voted on separately on its own merits."

Mrs. Crystal Eastman Benedict and Miss Doris Stevens of the Congressional Union for Women's Suffrage said they were delighted that a question as to the possibility of passing the Parsons resolution had come up early in the Constitutional Convention session.

"For if there is going to be any muddling of the issue," they said, "it is better to have it occur early, when we can all watch how the trick was turned. It would be too bad if the convention simply let the matter go to the end of the session without doing anything one way or the other."

Anti Anxious, Too.

While the question of a possible adverse action on the suffrage matter stirred up a feeling of alarm on the part of suffrage workers, it seemed to have just the opposite effect upon the anti-suffrage or ganizations.

Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, President of the Association Opposed to Woman's Suffrage, and representatives of the Men's League Opposed to Woman's Suffrage, of which Everett P. Wheeler is President, asked their legal advisers for an opinion as to the right of the Constitutional Convention to pass upon the suffrage matter independent of past legislative action.

"Of course, I read the news of the opposition to the Parsons resolution in THE NEW YORK TIMES with the keenest of interest," said Mrs. Dodge. "It is entirely reasonable to assume that the people elected the members of the Constitutional Convention pins upon all matters affecting the new Constitution. And this quite without regard to previous legislative action. I should say that the men now selected to make a Constitution were specially chosen for that task because of their peculiar qualifications and that if they are opposed to woman's suffrage they ought certainly to make the new Constitution reflect their view. For one, am perfectly willing to trust the case in their hands and abide by their decision. I think they are qualified to handle the matter according to their own ideas as to the law and the obligations they are under.

"We are anxious, however, to have the Constitutional Convention decide, one way or the other, as soon as possible, because we want to go ahead issuing instructions to voters. We are planning to instruct voters to vote 'No' on the woman's suffrage amendment, and if the convention should settle the matter in another way than by submitting the referendum passed by the Legislature, it will force us to change all our plans."

"I think the convention should submit the suffrage amendment in the same form as submitted by the Legislature. Let us decide the question finally."

GORGAS HITS AT GOETHALS.

Criticises Chairman's Sanitary Methods on the Canal.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, April 30.—Major Gen. Goethals, Chairman of the Panama Canal Commission, was criticised here today by Dr. Gorgas, Surgeon General of the United States Army and noted for his sanitary work in the tropics. General Goethals was not mentioned by name, but as the Chairman of the commission. The criticism was in an address made by General Gorgas at the dedication of the Washington University Medical School.

"I was much disappointed," he said, "that we did not get rid of malaria on the Isthmus of Panama as we did at Havana. I had fully expected to do so, and when we went to the Isthmus we put into effect the same anti-malarial measures that had been so successful at Havana. These measures were vigorously pushed for the first four years. At the end of our four years' work the malarial rate had been reduced from 821 per thousand to 282.

"In 1907 a new commission was placed by the President in control of the Isthmus, and in 1908 all the power on the Isthmus was concentrated in the hands of a single man, the Chairman of the commission. This officer thought it advisable to make radical changes in the methods of sanitation. These changes, ordered by the Chairman, took execution of the anti-malarial work out of the hands of the sanitary authorities and placed them in the hands of men who had no special knowledge of anti-malarial work.

"I argued against these changes as forcibly as I could, but to no avail.

"I am convinced that if our Chairman of 1908 had been able to put into effect, in 1904, the methods he forced upon me in 1908 we could not have accomplished the sanitary success at Panama which we had accomplished prior to the year 1908."

ASKS $10,000 FOR ASSAULT.

Irving Olenik Sues L. M. Taylor, Secretary of Shoe League.

Irving Olenick, who is connected with the firm of Van Praag & Co., wholesale auctioneers, of 17 Greene Street, began yesterday before Justice Hendrick in the Supreme Court a civil action to recover $10,000 for alleged injuries which he charges were inflicted upon him by Louis M. Taylor, Secretary of the Wholesale Shoe League, at 127 Duane Street. The alleged assault occurred on Wednesday morning, when Mr. Olenick was forcibly excluded from the rooms of the league. Mr. Taylor gave $300 bond yesterday to insure his appearance when the suit is brought to trial. Mr. Olenick is represented by Schlesinger & Lazarbe, attorneys, of 10 Wall Street.

The complaint sts forth that Mr. Olenick, who lives at 420 Riverside Drive, went to the league offices to attend the meeting of the creditors of Daniel Gerdwagen of Brooklyn, whose assets his firm was interested. He charges that Taylor told him his concern was not a creditor entitled to a share in the assets deposited with him. Mr. Olenick thereupon objected, and Mr. Taylor answered his objection by forcibly ejecting him from the room, and in so doing "violently assaulted and battered the plaintiff."

Mr. Taylor's answer is that Mr. Olenick became so objectionable that he was forced to exclude him from the room.

FEW TOURISTS IN CABINS.

Five Liners Will aCrry 2,500 Passengers Abroad Today.

Twenty-five hundred passengers of all classes will leave New York today for Europe on five liners, which is the largest number sailing on any an eday this Spring. Among the 300 in the first cabin on the Cunarder Lusitania for Liverpool are fifty-one Canadians, mostly representatives of firms having contracts with the British War Department. There are also several American manufacturers agents going over in the hope of getting contracts from the Allies. Of the 500 second cabin on the Lusitania, a large percentage are young Canadians and Englishmen from the West, going over to the old country to enlist for the war.

The other steamers sailingar e the American liner New York, with a big crowd for Liverpool; the Holland-American liner Rotterdam for Rotterdam, the Anchor liner Cameronia for Glasgow, and the Bergensfjord of the Norwegian-American Line for Bergen. Less than 5 per cent. of the passengers going over to Europe today are without some specific reason for traveling, the steamship agents said.

APPRAISE GODWIN ESTATE.

MINEOLA, L. I., April 30.—Nora Godwin, granddaughter of William Cullen Bryant, left a net estate of $299,221, according to an appraisal filed today in the Surrogate's office. The estate will be distributed equally between two sisters, Minnie G. Goddard, of 33 East Fiftieth tSreet, Manhattan, and Fanny G. White of Glen Cove, L. I.; a brother, Harold Godwin of Roslyn, and a niece, Natalie De Castro Pierrepont, of 120 East Seventy-ninth Street, Manhattan.

Miss Godwin left no will. Her estate, with the exception of a home in Roslyn, which is valued at $4,500, consists of personal property represented principally by stocks and bonds in railroad and realty companies.

Miss Godwin died at Roslyn on March 16, 1914. She was the daughter of Fannq Godwin, nee Bryant.

O'GORMAN SAYS NO TO SUFFRAGE PLEAS

STANDS FOR STATE RIGHTS

Declares He Will Give Support to No Enfranchising Federal Amendment.

"I will not vote for this or any other woman suffrage amendment," said Senator James A. O'Gorman to the big delegation of women representing the Women's Congressional Union which visited him by appointment in his office yesterday afternoon to ask support for the Bristow-Mondell bill to submit an amendment to the Federal Constitution to give women the right to vote.

The Senator hit right and left in a speech of some length, becoming more and more emphatic until at the close the women left the office with compressed lips and flushed cheeks, angry at the scorn the Senator plainly showed for their cause.

There were bursts of indignation and scornful laughter at times from over the big office, which was filled with women in brilliant suffrage regalia, as the Senator spoke.

"It is easy to see that you have never been enslaved," pleaded Inez Milholland Boissevain, following the Senators vehement statement that he would not vote for the amendment.

Too Hasty, Says Senator.

"Arn't you women going too hastily!" the Senator asked at one stage of the discussion.

There was a long drawn breath of resentment as one woan cried: "Too quickly! After forty years!"

"Can freedom come too quickly?" asked Mrs. Boissevain.

"But you know," said Senator O'Gorman, "the women do not have to depend upon amendments. They have a great deal of influence. They are very powerful," he continued politely.

There was a burst of scornful laughter. "It is too late to say anything like that to us now," one cried.

"Will the Senator humiliate the women of the South by forcing them to get the vote through tStates and go to the black man, and ask him to give it to them?" cried another visitor.

"Thewomen have tools with which they can work now," said Mrs. Chrystal Eastman Benedict. "The women voters are a power in the country. It is only a question of time when we will unite these voters to force some of our issues."

Some things the Senator said counded like taunts. "You know," he said, "I could fill another room pust as large as this with women who do not want the vote."

The women bith, their lips and said nothing.

"Do you know," he asked, "that in one of the suffrage States there are more square miles than there are inhabitants? More miles than people? There are only 8,000,000 people in all of the eleven suffrage States taken together. That is not many more than there are in this city. What is good for Utah and Colorado may not be good for New York."

Call Politicians Insincere.

In repiy, they told him the politicians were not sincere in standing for State rights because they had made national amendments for an income tax and the direct election of Senators, and had enfranchised the Indian and the negro and were considering the enfranchisement of the Filipino.

One hit of the afternoon was made by Mrs. Benedict who told the Senator that the direct election of Senators had been practiced in individual States before it was been made national by the Federal amendment. The Senator stazed to other reasons.

"I don't care about why it was dont," said Mrs. Benedict. "I only know that it worked." There were shouts of laughter.

"We think the Democratic Party is dodging the issues, that it is insincere," put in Mrs Boissevain. "We want its stand made plain, and we do not think it does make it plain by climbing the fence of State's rights."

There were cries of "Bravo, Bravo!" when Mrs. Benedict illustrated the position of the women and the vote which is always withheld from them, with a story of a boy whos father promised him a boat when he had learned to swim, and held back again and again until he could swim faster, to be a stronger swimmer, and to swim against the current. "He finally passes the point," said Mrs. Benedict, "where swimming was a matter of education."

Mrs. Benedict also declared that the continued refusal of enfranchisements would finally result in an estrangement between men and women which it would take years to overcome.

Mrs. Prendergast's Argument.

Mrs. William A. Prendergast asked why woman suffrage should be a matter of geography. "Isn't it incongruous," she said, "for a President of the United States to listen with respect and attention (a respect and attention the ballot gives) to the women of one part of the country and ignore the opinions of the women of another; to appeal for support to women of one section while others stand by powerless to help or hinder his nomination. Votes for women is as logical and just in one part of the country as in another. Votes for women will simplify, not complicate the problems of the States. Our country ought to be too big and magnanimous to stand by and see the flower of its womanhood spending itself in this hard struggle to which it has consecrated itself and which it is determined never to relinquish until it is won, when with one single act, of justice it can place its women, who have never failed it in time of need, in a position of diginity which they surely merit and which they will always cherish."

"The slow, tedious process of converting the male electorate of half the country is a task that we feel is too wasteful," said Miss Doris Stevens. "It is too humiliating and unjust, and that is the reason we women have come to Congress in such numbers the last two years to ask for a Federal amendment."

A Right of the States.

In his speech Senator O'Gorman said he could not on principle support an amendment that would deprive the States of the regulation of suffrage and that he should oppose it unless it was imperatively demanded by the people of New York State.

"States that want woman suffrage can bestow it now as freely and as effectively as the Federal Government could if the Federal Constitution were amended for that purpose," he said. "The sole purpose of the proposed amendment seems to be to force woman suffrage on the tSates that are opposed to it. I cannot favor this compulsory method. tI violates every principle of home rule and local self-government. If this matter is as meritorious as its advocates contend they should be willing to allow each State to determine the question for itself."

He said he did not believe in unnecessary chcanges in the Constitution under which the country has prospered for 125 years. "Prudence admonishes us to be slow in removing ancient landmarks," he said, and explained at length his belief in States rights.

Senator O'Gorman was more emphatic in the speech he made to the women than in the one which had been previously dictated. In that speech the Senator ended with: "I regret that I cannot become an advocate of the plan to amend the Federal Constitution in the manner proposed." His actual refusal to vote for the amendment was vehement.

Before the call on the Senator the women held an open-air meeting from two decorated automobiles in front of the Sub-Treasury Building. One of its features was denunciation of President Wilson's suffrage attitude by Mrs. Jessie Hardy Stubbs. Mrs. Stubbs said members of the Women's Congressional Union ha dtaken pages of Mr. Wilson's book on "Liberty" to him and made him "eat his words."

The leaders of the day who directed the proceedings were: Chief marshal, Miss Jonet Burns; aids, Mrs. C. Albert Cassar, Mrs. Edward Livingston Hunt, Mrs. Howard Hilton, Mrs. Francis Thurber, Mrs. Bertram Sears, Mrs. Henry Butterworth and the Misses Eleanor Beach, Hollingsworth Beach, Eleanor Brightson, Elisabeth Youngs, Dolly Kimbrough, Helen McCaldin, Eva Jane Smith, Edith Grove, Esther Murphy, Alice Hall, Katherine Browning, Kate Schermerhorn, and Eleanor Keep. Mrs. Robert Adamson, Mrs. Lawrence Greer, Mrs. Winthrop Burr, Mrs. Calvin Tomkins, Miss Annie Peck, Mrs. Ernest Poole, and Mrs. Lloyd Osborne were a few of the other women present.

"Well, he has declared himself clearly," said Miss Doris Stevens, head of the New York Branch of the Women's Congressional Union, at the close of the afternoon. "That was what we wanted and it was worth coming for."

Similar delegations are to visit Congressmen and Senators in all parts of the country.

ROCKEFELLER BUYS LAKES.

Oil Man Now Owns Both Sides of Watershed.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., April 30.—John D. Rockefeller has added 105 acres to his 6,000-acre estate by acquiring the John Webber property at Tarrytown Heights. Mr. Rockefeller owns the watershed on the north of the Tarrytown Lakes and by purchasing the Webber land he owns the South side so that in effect two lakes are practically part of his estate and add to its beauty.

His plans for the property have not been disclosed. It contains valuable timber and immense quarries. The price paid is said to have been more than $100,000.

Mr. Rockefeller walked over every foot of the land before closing the deal.

MAY DAY PARADERS TO DENOUNCE WAR

Equal Rights for Jews Also Part of Big Labor Demonstration.

GIRL WORKERS IN LINE

Socialists and Union Workers to Rendezvous in Union Square for Speeches After Procession.

Fifty labor unions, having a membership of more than 50,000, will be represented in paradee and demonstrations intended as a protest against the European war, to be held in Manhattan, Brooklyn, and parts of New Jersey today. Simultaneously demands are to be made for equal rights for Jews in Europe at the end of the conflict.

The parade in the interest of equal rights for Jews alone will pour 12,000 working men and women into Union Square, where the finale of nearly all the Manhattan demonstrations will take place. In this parade there will be 10,000 girl workers in the shirtwaist industry, wearing white uniforms with red sashes, and 2,000 bakers dressed in white duck uniforms. This parade will start from Rutgers Square at 1:30 o'clock, and will move across Canal Street, to Second Avenue, Houston Street, First Avenue, First Street, Second Avenue, Fourth Street to Union Square.

It will assemble on the east side of Union Square, where Abraham Shiplikeff of the United Hebrew Trades will preside, while speeches demanding equal rights for Jews the world over are made in a dozen different languages.

The demonstration will include a parade of a large number of Socialists. These will form in line at Nineteenth Street and Third Avenue, and among the organizations represented will be the German workingmen's singing societies, the Bohemian and Jewish Socialists branches of Harlem, the Polish and Slavonic branches, the Women's Committee of the New York local of the Socialist Party, the Socialist Pioneers, Finnish and Scandanavian branches; the Fourth Avenue Union Square, Cigarmakers' Union No. 90, Carpenters Union No. 309, and other organizations. The route of this parade will be through Nineteenth Street, Second Avenue, Fourth Street, Washington Square, Fifth Aveque, Fortieth Street, Madison Avenue, Fourth Avenue to Union Square.

The Socialists will hold their final meeting in front of the cottage in the north end of the Square, where speeches will be made by Anita G. Block, Jacob Panken, Ludwig Lore, William Karlin, Bertha Fraser and others.

More than 2,000 Socialist Sunday school children will take part in a peace demonstration at Sulzer's Harlem River Casino, 127th Street and Second Avenue. Here, also, will end a parade of Bakers' Union Nos. 1 and 164; Butchers' Union No. 174, and Painters' Union No. 499, starting from the Labor Temple, Second Avenue and Fourteenth Street, at 3 o'clock, and proceeding up Third Avenue to 116th Street, to Second Avenue to Sulzer's Park.

DISCUSS MANY PLANS OF COURT REFORM

But Constitutional Convention Is Unlikely to Provide for an Appointive Judiciary.

MAY DROP CLUMSY RULES

Practical Agreement in Committee to Simplify Procedure—Attack Planned on the Law's Delays.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 30.—It is regarded here as an entirely safe prediction, even at this early stage of the Constitutional Convention, that the strong recommendations for an appointive instead of an elective judiciary, which have been filed with the Judiciary Committee, will go unheeded. The change has been urged by leading lawyers of all parts of the State and has found a conspicuous advocate in ex-President Taft, whose address on the subject before the State Bar Association led that body to go on record in favor of a proposed amendment to the judiciary article in the Constitution to carry the suggestion into effect.

The wisdom of the proposed change is not disputed by a majority of the lawyers who are delegates to the Convention, but on every hand the fear is expressed that the adoption of the suggestions made might endanger the revised draft of the Constitution when it is submitted to the voters for ratification this Fall.

How to obviate the law's delays and how to reduce the high cost of justice to litigants are the two chief questions with which the Judiciary Committee will be called upon to deal in evolving a new article of the Constitution. Ex-Attorney General Wickersham, who is Chairman of the committee, has announced that his committee next week will begin giving hearings, to which Bar Associations and Judges from all parts of the State have been invited to attend and make recommendation for reforms.

The Republican platform contained a strong plank on the subject of judiciary reform.

"We favor a thorough reform of judicial procedure," the platform said. "We believe that the delays and expense incident to the administration of justice should and can be materially reduced."

A proposal looking to the simplification of judicial procedure and the consequent obviation of delays in litigation has been agreed upon informally by members of the Judiciary Committee. This involves a grant of power to the courts to make their own rules of procedure and a consequent deliverance from the great mass of statutory rules of procedure at present imposed on the courts by the Legislature.

If the present intention of many members of the Judiciary Committee is carried out the courts will be permitted to make their own rules, limited only by a short and simple practice act, which the Legislature would pass and limited, of course, by the provisions of the Constitution.

Judging from the talk of men who will wield much influence in the shaping of the revised Judiciary Article, it is not at all unlikely that the new article will contain a positive inhibition against the many postponements of trials which now hamper the courts. Under the present system, according to practitioners at the bar, lawyers on trifling pretexts succeed in having the trials of their cases put off for long periods, with the result that their clients suffer and court calendars are cluttered with litigation that should have been disposed of.

"It is well known among men of our profession," said a leading lawyer-delegate today, "that many lawyers, relying on the time honored practice of the courts in suiting the convenience of the attorneys are undertaking to do far more work than they should undertake in justice to their clients and the courts. In my opinion it would be wise for us to establish a positive rule that a case must go to trial on the day fixed on the court calendar or go by default against the litigant whose counsel is not ready to go on. Practice has shown that the large measure of discretion now left with the courts has worked to the detriment of the entire judiciary system.

"They have something approximating the plan now under consideration in England, where it works well. There a litigant goes to a solicitor who undertakes to see his case through. The solicitor prepares the case and under the plan in vogue is compelled to employ one or more barristers who familiarize themselves with the issues involved and are prepared to go into court and try them on a moment's notice."

LEGALIZES PEACE UNION.

Carnegie Organization Now Incorporated Under State Law.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 30.—Gov. Whitman today signed a bill introduced by Senator Mills, incorporating the Church Peace Union, founded by Andrew Carnegie. The Governor's signature legalizes a voluntary organization formed under Mr. Carnegie's direction on Feb. 10, 1914.

The measure provides that after the union has attained its object—"the arbitration of international disputes"—the organization may devote its funds to "the relief of the deserving poor and afflicted in their distress, especially such as shall have struggled long and earnestly against misfortune and shall not themselves be to blame for their poverty."

Under the bill the corporation, with the aid of churches and religious organizations, is to advance the cause of peace among nations, hasten the abolition of international war and encourage and promote the peaceful settlement of international differences A world-wide campaign of education regarding the causes, nature and effect of war is to be carried on. The union will undertake the education of ministers as a part of its fight.

The organization plans to establish peace libraries and peace publications throughout the world. Prizes will be awarded for essays on peace.

TO RID MILITIA OF LIARS.

Governor Approves Dishonorable Discharge of Guilty Private.

No man convicted of lying will be allowed to remain in the New York National Guard. This policy received the sanction of Governor Whitman yesterday in his approval of the proceedings of a court-martial which dishonorably discharged Private Harry Mudick of the Forty-seventh Infantry, after conviction for telling a lie.

Mudick was with a detachment at Grasmere, S. I., some time ago, when another enlisted man used obsene language in the presence of women. Mudick, when asked whether he heard the language, told his Lieutenant that he did, and later denied it. The man who used the language was tried and dishonorably discharged.

In the order publishing the sentence issued yesterday Major Gen. O'Ryan said:

"Service in the National Guard is fundamentally based on a spirit of self-sacrifice and a high standard of honor. To deliberately lie is to render the offender unfit to remain in the military service of the State."

To Confer on Building Inspection.

Mayor Mitchel wrote last night to Walter Lindner of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, who represented the real estate interests at the hearing on the vetoed Lockwood-Ellenbogen bill, to acknowledge his willingness to discuss the rearrangement of the building inspection system. Mr. Lindner will confer with Fire Commissioner Adamson, Corporation Counsel Polk, and Tenement House Commissioner Murphy to see of some temporary inspection plan may not be worked out.

SLEUTHS DRESS AS WOMEN.

Go Strolling at Night and Catch Alleged Hold-Up Man.

Acting Captain Wines, in charge of the Bronx Detective Bureau, congratulated his men yesterday on the arrest of a young man 6 feet 2 inches in height, who said he was Joseph Hass, 21 years old, of 1,113 Westchester Avenue, that he had a $10,000 suit against the city and that he was a "personal friend" of County Court Judge Louis D. Gibbs. Hass was arrested in Frank Sigel Park, where for the last three weeks a hold-up man had insulted young couples and robbed and attacked the escorts of girls and young women.

So numerous were the complaints that Acting Captain Wines detailed a number of young detectives to the case. Several of the officers, to lure the hold-up man, donned women's attire Thursday night, and with brother officers as escorts, sauntered through the secluded walks of the park. Detective Sullivan, with another detective dressed as a woman, was meandering along when, he asserts, Hass sprang from a clump of bushes. As he made a threatening advance, the detective disguised as a woman struck Hass, knocking him down. Hass was then arrested charged with carrying a black jack.

The police assert that Hass's description tallies with that given by a number of the victims of hold-ups in the park. According to the police, Hass was sent to the penitentiary on March 19, 1913, for petty larceny. They also say he was sent to the workhouse some months ago for ninety days for disorderly conduct. While in the kitchen of the workhouse a pot of fat boiled over, burning Hass's legs and hands. Hence the suit for $10,000 which he has instituted against the city.

Acting Captain Wines would not make public the names of the detectives who impersonated women, saying other detectives might feel inclined to poke fun at them. The detectives who played the part of escorts for the disguised officers were Detectives Sullivan, O'Mara and McIlhargy.

Hass was arraignd before Magistrate Breen in the Yorkville Court and held in $1,000 bail for examination on Monday.

DEFENDS GIRLS' MUTINY.

Dismissed Superintendent Sympathizes with Magdalene Inmates.

Mrs. Antonia Friedman, former superintendent of the Magdalen Home, whose regisnation occasioned a mutiny among some of the inmates Thursday night, gave out a statement yesterday at the home of her mother, 39 East Tenth Street. Mrs. Friedman said she served as superintendent for six weeks, having been placed there on trial. She said Mrs. James B. Reynolds, president of the home, engaged her, and that without any explanation Mrs. H. Scheftel, Second Vice President, told her to leave the place on Thursday, without giving her time to pack her belongings.

When some of the girls threatened to make a protest Mrs. Friedman said she tried to persuade them to keep their peace and make no comment. The girls who were hailed to the Women's Night Court should be dealt with considerately, she thought, for they made the demonstration as a protest to a return of what they say will be old customs of being punished severely for minor infractions. These punishments, according to Mrs. Friedman, consist of being deprived of many little liberties, going to bed supperless, and being put into cells.

Mrs. Friedman contended that she ruled with love and kindness and that at no time while she was serving as superintendent did she have occasion to make use of the cells. She said she was still unaware of why she was summarily dismissed.

PLEADS FOR MRS. WALTERS.

Attorney Asks That She Be Admitted to Bail.

Abraham Cohen, counsel for Mrs. Ida Sniffen Walters, who killed her two children in December, made motions, before Justice Brady, in the Supreme Court in the Bronx, yesterday, for the dismissal of the indictments against Lorlys Elton Rogers and Mrs. Walters, and also incorporated an application for bail in the case of Mrs. Rogers, who is now in the Bronx County Jail.

Justice Brady strongly intimated that he might grant bail,and said that the case was very saw. He thought the majority of the people and all officials who had come into the case viewed it as he did.

A representative of the District Attorney opposed the bail motion as unusual. Mr. Levy declared that he was making for an early trial, as a few more weeks in jail would certainly result in the death of Mrs. Walters. He pleaded that her unborn child be freed from the stigma of birth in jail. The Justice put the matter over to Monday. Meantime an effort will be made t obtain the courtroom of the Surrogate of Bronx County for the trial.

Dr. M. S. Gregory, alienist at Bellevue Hospital, and another alienist were takento Mrs. Rogers yesterday by a representative of the Bronx District Attorney, and they spent about two hours with the imprisoned woman.

YEAR AND DAY FOR LOOKER.

President of Monaton Realty Co. Sentenced to Penitentiary.

Judge Cushman, in the Federal District Court, yesterday sentenced Pierre M. Looker, President of the Monaton Realty Company, to one year and one day in the Atlanta Penitentiary. He had been found guilty of using the mails to defraud in connection with the sale of the securities of the realty company, and was charged with having thereby swindled widows, clergymen, and small wage earners out of $1,000,000. He was convicted on seven counts, and the sentence he received is the shortest that carries with it imprisonment.

In pronouncing sentence Judge Cushman dwelt on the grave responsibility of those who undertake to administer the earnnigs of other people, and said he did not believe it possible to overemphasize the duty of making conservative and careful representations to the people whose money is to be invested.

"There does not seem," he said, "to be any better way to inculcate this responsibility than to mete out punishment when an unfair advantage is taken f the facilities that are afforded for making these representations."

CASANOVA ESTATE $345,960.

Provision Made for Daughter if She Should Abandon Life in Convent.

Sebastina Casanova, living in a Benedictine convent in England, will enjoy an income of $100 a month under the will of her mother, Mrs. Catherine A. F. Casanova, if the young woman choses to abandon "the religious life she leads there," according to the record placed on file in the office of the State Controller yesterday with the appraisal of Mrs. Casanova's estate.

The report shows a net estate of $345,960, from which a trust fund is to be set aside for the purpose of allowing the daughter to choose her course. Among other bequests is a monthly allowance of $100 for life for the benefit of Felix Charles Maria Herman, a grandson of the testator, if he shall be "always obedient and respectful to his mother, Mrs. Ermina H. Schroen," a daughter of the testator and who receives $320,000 under the will.

The assets include net equities in east side realty aggregating $267,000.

Their 50th Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Grossman of 61 East 124th Street, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at the Hotel Majestic on Saturday evening, April 24, with a family dinner, followed by a dance. The Rev. Dr. Lissman officiated at the ceremony. Miss Elise Adler was the flower girl.

WHITMAN SIGNS SECURED DEBTS BILL

Mills Measure, Opposed by One Man Only at Public Hearing, Made a Law.

OUSTS HARRIS FROM OFFICE

Governor Approves More Than Half a Hundred Measures—Vetoes Plan for Infant Insurance.

ALBANY, April 30.—Governor Whitman today signed the Mills Secured Debts bill after a hearing. The measure provides that bonds registered with the State Controller between May 1 and Nov. 1 of this year may, by the payment of a tax of 7½ mills on the dollar, be exempted from taxation for five years. After Nov. 1 no bonds may be registered, as the administration plans the passage at the next Legislature of a more comprehensive bill. Several weeks ago Governor Whitman signed a measure suspending the action of the old secured debts law under which bonds were exempted from taxation in perpetuity by the payment of a tax of five mills on the dollar.

A. C. Pleydell, representing the Tax Reform Association, was the only person to appear against the bill at today's hearing. He asked the Governor to veto the measure on the ground that the present system was fair and that the new tax was too heavy. A. L. Judson headed a group of bond brokers who approved the Mills bill. He said that the opposition of the Reform Association was based on its desire for a single tax upon land.

"Why," he said, "the Tax Reform Association is known among us as a tax dodgers' association."

The Governor also signed the Hinman bill, which ousts from office Edwin S. Harris, appraiser of canal lands. The measure transfers the duties of the office to the Department of Public Works. The bill was introduced by Assemblyman Hinman on the ostensible ground of economy. Mr. Harris received a salary of $5,000. The Hinman bill leaves the salary of the new appraiser to the judgment of the Commissioner of Public Works.

Approximately the same office force will be needed. It was Mr. Harris who, it is said, supplied the New York City authorities with the figures with which they attacked Governor Whitman's contention that the State needed to raise $18,000,000 by direct taxes. Democrats in the Legislature asserted that the Hinman bill was for revenge.

The Feinberg bill, which imposes a penalty of forty years' imprisonment for bomb throwing on land or on a ship when human life is endangered, also was signed today. The measure imposes a penalty of twenty-five years for bomb throwing when the courts rule that human life was not endangered.

Among the fifty other bills which the Governor made laws today was the Stoddard bill, prohibiting the use of a family name in the conduct of business unless a member of the firm bears the name or has inherited a share in the business, and the Pratt bill, appropriating $20,000 for the construction of a schoolhouse on the grounds of the Great Meadow Prison for the children of the employes of the institution.

The McWhinney bill, providing for submission by the State Engineer of approval or disapproval of a State appropriation of $995,000 to purchase a right of way for a Federal canal along the south side of Long Island, connecting Jamaica Bay, Hempstead Bay, South Oyster Eay, Great South Bay, Moriches Bay, Shinnecock Bay, and Peconic Bay was signed. The national government has agreed to dig the canal if the State will supply the right of way.

The Governor issued a long statement accompanying his veto of a bill which would allow fraternal societies to insure infants of the age of one year or more upon application from parents or guardian.

The Governor said that the foundation of fraternal organization was the observance of contracts among members and that inasmuch as an infant could not execute a contract, their insurance had no place in fraternal society business.

The Governor said he vetoed the measure because of his good will toward fraternal organizations.

Governor Whitman tonight announced eight hearings for next week on bills before him. The most important of the hearings is that on the Spring bill consolidating the State Labor Department and the Workmen's Compensation Commission under an Industrial Board. This hearing will be given on Wednesday. There also will be hearings on Wednesday on the Brooklyn "ripper" bills which oust from office the Democratic Commissioner of Records, the Commissioner of Jurors, and the Public Administrator of Kings County.

There will be hearings on Thursday night on the Machold storage reservoir measure, the Simpson insurance bill, the Thompson Jitney bill, and the Baxter Water Supply bill.

OPPOSES PALMIERI MOTION.

Bronx Prosecutor Says Ex-Judge Seeks Special Privileges.

Max D. Steuer, representing ex-Judge John Palmieri, under indictment for subordination of perjury growing out of the trial of John J. Delaney, the Bronx politician now in Sing Sing for white slavery, argued before Justice Brady in the Bronx Supreme Court yesterday on a motion to inspect the Grand Jury minutes.

Assistant District Attorney Mork argued against the motion. He said Mr. Steuer was on a fishing expedition, looking for special privileges; that his client had been a Judge and once a Deputy Attorney General, but should receive no favors that the ordinary citizen might not enjoy.

Justice Brady reserved decision.

Answers Daniels and Continues Criticism in Open Letter to "Professor" Taft.

QUOTES "BLUFF OLD" FISKE

Says He "Blurted Out" the Uncompromising Truth as to Navy's Preparedness—Jibes at Our Submarines.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Representative Augustus P. Gardner of Massachusetts has written an open letter to ex-President William H. Taft, in which he answers the letter of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, to President Garfield of Williams College, on the subject of the navy's preparedness for war. The letter of Mr. Daniels was an answer mainly to criticisms of Representative Gardner, who has been engaged in a propaganda to call attention to the needs of the army and the navy.

Mr. Gardiner's letter is in an ironical and jocular vein. Apparently with the idea of suggesting covertly that Mr. Garfield's inquiry to Mr. Taft was written as the result of an arrangement to give Mr. Daniels an excuse to make a defense of the navy, Mr. Gardner makes it appear in his letter that he received a telegram from Mr. Taft asking him to comment on the views of Mr. Daniels. Furthermore, Mr. Gardner addresses the ex-President of the United States as "Professor" Taft, seemingly to emphasize ironically the interest that another educator, President Garfield, has shown in the subject of preparedness for war.

Mr. Gardner, who refers to himself as "an ordinary mudlary Congressman," says that the comparison made of the navy under the first two years of President Wilson's administration with the last two years of President Taft's administration; might have been a little misleading if Mr. Daniels had pointed out that a Democratic House of Representatives controlled the purse-strings of the nation for the second half of Mr. Taft's term. The opinion is expressed by Mr. Gardner that a definite statement as to the comparative speed of our fighting ships, the up-to-dateness of our aircraft and the sufficiency of our mines, torpedoes, and ammunition would be more interesting to President Garfield than a discussion as to whether a Republican administration or a Democratic administration was most to blame "for the fact that we are so deporably behind the times."

Says Daniels Didn't Answer.

"The question of our readiness for war with an efficient enemy is worth discussion at some length," says Mr. Gardner. "The Secretary's mere assertion that our ships were in a position to make a brove showing against the Mexican Navy and the southwest wind at Vera Cruz will not stand for one moment against the positive views as to our unreadiness for war expressed by Commander Yarnell and Admiral Fiske, chief of operations of the fleet.

"Some of the particular assertions which I have heretofore made, and which the Secretary entirely leaves unanswered, are these:

"Relative strength of our navy: I invite your attention to the fact that on the first of July, 1914, before the European war broke out, our navy had fallen to fourth place, according to our own official figures. At that time the warship tonnage of Germany, built and building, had grown to over one million, three hundred thousand tons, while ours was less than nine hundred thousand tons. Meanwhile the warship tonnage of Great Britain, built and building, was half a million tons larger than that of Germany and the United States combined. Even France was a little ahead of us. Even admitting that warship tonnage is not an exact method of measurement, our standing cannot be much improved by any oher method.

"I assert that on July 1, 1914, Great Britain had forty-six dreadnoughts and dreadnought cruisers, built and building, while Germany's vessels of the same description numbered twenty-eight, and ours numbered only twelve. Most of our battleships, unfortunately, are old-fashioned pre-dreadnoughts.

"My authority for these statements is the bulletin published by the United States Office of Naval Intelligence, entitled Warship Tonnage of the Principal Naval Powers, July 1, 1914.

"Are we strong enough? It is the opinion of those best able to judge that our navy is totally inadequate for our defense. As you know very well, the General Board of the Navy is today and always has been composed of the very best naval officers in the service. Ever since 1903 the General Board has declared that we must have forty-eight battleships less than twenty years old in order to make us safe against the navy of Germany or any other nation except Great Britain. The General Board does not pretend that forty-eight battleships would be sufficient to protest us against England's mighty navy. In addition, the General Board tells us that we must have one hundred and ninety-two destroyers as well as other ships in certain proportions.

"Instead of forty-eight battleships and one hundred and ninety-two destroyers under twenty years old, we have at present, built and building, only thirty-seven battleships and sixty-eight destroyers. It is true that this year we have authorized the construction of two more battleships and six more destroyers. It is also true that in 1919, when these new battleships will be ready the battleship Iowa will have long passed the twenty-year mark, and the battleships Kearsarge, Kentucky and Alabama will be nineteen years old. My authorities for these facts are the reports of the General Board of the Navy for 1913-14, and a certain document, a copy of which has been refused me, known as Number 402-2 of Oct. 17, 1913. This document was in the office of Admiral Dewey three months ago.

A "Sorry Lot" of Submarines.

"Submarines: As to submarines, Admiral Vrooland testified that we need one hundred submarines for harbor defense alone. If you reckon the F-4 which is at the bottom of the sea, and if you reckon all the submarines which are in the scrap heap and those which ought to be in the scrap heap, and if you reckon all the submarines which are building, you will find that we have just fifty-nine—a sorry lot they are, many of them at least. It is true that Congress overruled Secretary Daniels' recommendation this year and followed the recommendation of the General Board so that instead of getting nine new submarines, we shall have eighteen. I am afraid that I took an unholy satisfaction in our victory.

"Speaking of submarines and the readiness of the navy for war, did you notice the evidence of Commander Sterling, chief of the Atlantic Submarine Flotilla, before the naval committee last December? It appears that early last November Admiral Fletcher ordered a general mobilization of the Atlantic Fleet. The rendezvous was in Hampton Roads. The newspapers stated that only one submarine out of seventeen in the Atlantic Fleet could dive. Congressman Roberts of the Naval Affairs Committee, refused to be quoted and kept up a rumpus until Commander Sterling was summoned.

"The Commander explained that five of the submarines were at the Panama Canal and ought not to be reckoned, which seemed reasonable. He then went on to testify that for one reason or another the bulk of the rest of them could not be mobilized and the ultimate result was described by Commander Sterling in the following language: 'So when we get down there the Admiral wanted to know what we could do. I told him we had then only one submarine that I

"If you think I am mistaken turn to pages 852 to 854, United States Navy Year Book, 1914.

"Don't you want to read my speeches? If I thought that the newspapers would print it or that any one would read it I could continue this letter either built definitely. At any time that you wish I should be glad to send you or any one else copies of the Army and Navy Manual, which I have prepared, likewise copies of my evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs, likewise copies of my addresses entitled 'Safety First' and 'Floating Has-Beens.'"

COURT HITS AT LEITER.

Wheat Operator Condemned for His "Strong-Armed Methods."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—In the Circuit Court at Rockville, Md., today, Judge Edward C. Peter made a decision scoring Joseph Leiter severely for what was characterized as high-handed conduct in cutting thet props under a bungalow on one of the islands in the Potomac River, opposite Mr. Leiter's country place. Addressing the noted Chicago wheat pit operator, Judge Peter said that "such high-handed, strong-armed methods of doing business don't go in this part of the country, although they may be condoned elsewhere."

The evidence showed that Mr. Leiter thought he owned the island, as it is separated by only twenty-five feet of deep water from his property. He sent an employe to cut the props on which was a bungalow, and let it fall into the river and was washed away. Mr. Leiter admitted that he had given the orders for getting rid of the bungalow and claimed that the island was his and the bungalow had been put there as an act of trespass.

Evidence was introduced, however, showing that the boundary between Maryland and Virginia, at the point where the island is situated, ran close to the Virginia shore and the disputed island was territory of the State of Maryland.

PASTOR'S CHAUFFEUR FINED

Rev. E. M. Stires's Driver Pays $5 for Daring a Policeman.

Traffic Policeman Gilgannon, stationed at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, was dared by a chauffeur to serve a summons on him, and as a result the chauffeur paid a fine of $5 before Magistrate Murphy in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday.

The driver was Roy Ward of 672 Crotona Parkway South, who drives a car for the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, chaplain of the Police Department and rector of St. Thomas's Church.

Ward was signaled to stop on Thursday and kept on in spite of the traffic policeman's uplifted arm. Some words followed, in which the chauffeur is alleged to have laughed at the officer and to have dared him to take any action.

Federal Bureau Gives Results of Its Study of Labor Condition in New York City.

16.2 PER CENT. OF WORKERS

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor has just published as Bulletin 172 a report on unemployment in New York City. The report is based on information obtained from a census of 104 city blocks in various sections of the city, carefully selected to include a representative number of families of various nationalities and all classes of industrial workers, combined with a census of all families in 3,703 individual tenement houses and residences, covering a still wider range of distribution. The figures obtained have been used as a basis for estimating the number of unemployed in the city.

The enumeration was made in the first half of February, 1915. Information was obtained from 54,849 families having a total membership of 229,428 persons, of which number 95,413 were wage earners. Of these families 11,723 had one or more wage earners out of work, showing an aggregate of 15,417 persons, or 16.2 per cent. of all wage earners in these families without employment of any kind. The total number of wage earners in New York City in 1915, estimated on the basis adopted by the Bureau of the Census, is approximately 2,455,000. The percentage of unemployment found among the members of 54,849 families visited (16.2) applied to this number shows that the total number of unemployed in New York City was about 398,000.

The above figures do not fully measure the amount of unemployment, for only those persons who had no employment whatever, regular or irregular, full time or part time, at the time of the agent's visit were recorded as unemployed. To find the full extent of unemployment it is necessary to consider also the large amount of part time or irregular employment existing in practically every industry. On account of the difficulty of obtaining definite information in regard to irregular or part time workers, all such were included in the number employed. The above estimate of 398,000 unemployed, therefore, does not include any of the irregular or part time workers.

A tabulation of the unemployed by periods of unemployment shows that 11.1 per cent. of all unemployed persons had been out of work more than 180 days; 26.4 per cent. more than 120 days; 39.3 per cent. more than 90 days; 55.8 per cent. more than 60 days; 76.4 per cent. more than 30 days; 88.4 per cent. more than 13 days, and 92.8 per cent. were out of work at least one week. The occupations or trades having the largest number of persons unemployed out of the total of 15,417 were: Common laborers 2,440, building trades 2,045, and the clothing trades 1,781. The fact is noted, however, that the figures were obtained at a season of the year when work in the building trades and in the clothing trades is normally slack and that the number out of work reported for these trades was affected to a large extent by the slack season.

In the report are embodied the results of two investigations made by organizations in New York City, the Mayor's Committee on Unemployment and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. The investigation by the Mayor's Committee on Unemployment was conducted by sending out letters of inquiry to a large number of employers of labor in New York City to ascertain the difference between the number of men employed in the week ending Dec. 19, 1914, and the number employed in the corresponding week in 1913. Responses were received from 602 establishments in all lines of trade and industry, employing during the week ended Dec. 19, 1914, a total of 250,723 persons. Comparing the figure obtained for the two years, the committee reported that the increase in the number unemployed, based on the decrease of employment, was about 8 per cent. of the total number of workers employed in December, 1913. And it was estimated that about 200,000 more persons were unemployed in New York in December, 1914, than in December, 1913.

At about the same time the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York made an investigation as to unemployment by a canvass of the families of policy holders of the company. Agents of the company obtained information from 155,960 families holding policies in the company, and found that 45,421 persons, or 18 per cent. of all wage earners this survey was made nearly a month earlier in the season than the investigation made by the Federal Bureau, and at a time when the extent of unemployment was probably somewhat greater. The results of the Metropolitan Company's study are, therefore, substantially in agreement with the results of the investigation made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

No figures of unemployment are in existence which would permit a comparison of the amount of unemployment in New York City during the Winter of 1914-15 with the amount of unemployment in other years, other seasons, and other places. The reliability and representative character of the figures obtained by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company led the Commissioner of Labor Statistics to employ that company to make similar studies in the Cities of Boston, Wilkes Barre, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and vicinity, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Paul and vicinity, Minneapolis, Duluth, Superior, Milwaukee, Chicago, Toledo, and Cleveland. The investigations in these several cities have been completed and the information collected is being tabulated. A summary of the results of these studies will be issued as soon as the figures are available, but the completed report probably cannot be published before July.

SUSPECT NEW BANK CALL.

Riggs Officials Say It Is Made to Offset Charges of Animus.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The Riggs National Bank's view of the new demands for information sent out to all the national banks of the country yesterday by John Skelton Williams, Controller of the Currency, gives a different explanation of those demands from that which was commonly accepted yesterday. According to this version, the new demands will have the effect of giving a universal aspect to demands made in the first place upon the Riggs National Bank alone, in an effort to oppress that institution. Persons close to the bank said today that yesterday's circular came too late to effect the bank's contention that personal animus led officials of the Treasury to tyrranical measures against it.

Publication of the fact that the bank took this position brought an authoritative reply tonight from the office of the Controller of the Currency. This reply is directed particularly to the statement, credited in an evening newspaper to counsel for the bank; that "the additional information on the new forms for reports of condition just sent out to national banks had been demanded of the Riggs National Bank in particular in the past," and that "the sending out of thhe new forms for statements by the office of the Controller * * * is a belated attempt to obtain from all banks infirmoation which the Riggs Bank had charged has been asked of that bank only in the past, to such an extent as to constitute the harassment and persecution of which the bank complained."

"It was officially stated at the office of the Controller of the Currency that the statement thus attributed to the counsel for the Riggs National Bank was wholly untrue, and that no portion of the additional information called for in the new reports of condition has been asked from the Riggs National Bank during the examinations which have been made of that bank beyond the information which every national bank examiner has for years past been required to get from every national bank at the time of each examination."

John Burke, Treasurer of the United States, who is named with Secretary McAdoo and Controller Williams as a defendant in the bank's proceedings, today broke silence to deprecate the suggestion that the case at issue had political ramifications. The case was a test of a purely legal point, said Mr. Burke. If the courts held that the Controller had exceeded his authority, the decision would be used by him thereafter as a guide against similar demands. But if the action of the defendant officials was sustained, the demands and fines would stand as of due authority. That was all that the case could mean, said Mr. Burke.

"Such discussions," said he, referring to political comment on the case, "reflects upon the Administration, the courts, and the banks. It seems to proceed upon the assumption that the suit will be decided as in a great popular convention and not in accordance with law. The laws of the land protect the national banks, including the plaintiff as well as every individual.

"The Treasury Department is interested, the Administration is interested, and every national bank should be interested in having every legal question involved decided, and decided right, so that Treasury officials and the banks may know when they are acting within the law. It is ridiculous to talk about the banks rallying to the defense of the plaintiff, about the Administration's making the case a political one, and as to whether Mr. Brandeis was employed in the case at a certain time. The case is now in court and will doubtless go to the court of last resort and be decided not in accordance with popular opinion, but according to law."

Architect's Plans Will Be Ready Today and Work Will Begin Next Friday.

COST WILL BE $17,000,000

Controller Prendergast Alone in Board of Estimate Dissents from Plan to Push Project.

Title to the additional real estate which is under condemnation proceedings to complete the Court House site will be taken on May 6, according to a resolution adopted yesterday by the Board of Estimate. The general ground plan of the area surrounding the Court House, as laid out by the Court House Board, was approved, and Borough President Marks was requested to take steps for the construction of temporary roadways around the Court House site. The Bureau of Franchises was directed to negotiate for the relocation of the Centre Street car tracks and the Second Avenue Railway Company's Worth Street tracks, which now traverse the site.

This was done with the assent of all the members of the Board of Estimate, except Controller Prendergast, who opposed altogether the taking of more land for the site on account of the condition of the city's finances. L. Laflin Kellogg and Charles Steckler of the Court House Board; Guy Lowell, the architect, and Alanson T. Briggs, the Executive Secretary of the board, were present to support their proposal, but nearly all the discussion was carried on by the Controller, the Mayor, and President McAneny.

Mayor Mitchel opened the debate by saying that one of the principal reasons for vesting title now was to save the city from damage suits on account of the closing of streets. Then, after President Pounds had explained that he was not necessarily in favor of constructing the Court House immediately and Mr. McAneny had excepted the St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Church property from the resolution until a conference had been held with its authorities, Controller Prendergast opened his attack.

He admitted that he had voted for the taking of the extra land last Summer, and since then many things had happened to modify his judgment, he said. He did not believe the board had any clear idea of the cost of the project, especially as he was assured that the city would not be able to recover as much of its outlay as it expected by the resale of the land it did not need for the Court House. In the end the city would probably have to spend $9,000,000 on the site, and moreover it would not be able to sell off its excess land until the Court House was finished, he said.

"Would you like to go back to the original site?" asked the Mayor.

"It would probably mean a very great loss."

The Controller gave no direct reply, but said he had not had time to get his ideas fully and clearly arranged.

"I was of the same mind originally," said the Mayor, "but now we are so far involved and have incurred such heavy expense that I think it safer to go on than to go back."

Mr. McAneny took exception to the Controller's calculation that the site would in the end cost as much as $9,000,000. He thought it fair to set off against that the $2,000,000 which the shift of the Court House would save in the digging of the foundations and on. So he suggested $7,000,000 as a fairer figure, and pointed out that the new tract gave the city from 40 to 50 per cent. more land than the original site.

The discussion then dropped and the vote was taken with only Controller Prendergast answering in the negative.

Secretary Kellogg of the Court House Board said it was ready to go ahead immediately if it obtained possession of the site next Friday. The board had had a letter from Mr. Lowell, announcing that he would submit to it today his final plans, which would then be ready to be sent to the Supreme Court Justices for their approval.

When Controller Prendergast was seen after the meeting of the Board of Estimate, he said he was determined, if he could, to get the vote of yesterday rescinded. He intended, he said, to go thoroughly into the matter and see if there was any way in which he could give his views effect.

CARRANZA AND MEXICO

By CARLO DE FORNARO

A Graphic Portrayal of Mexico's New Leader

"If the European war had not come along and swamped the headlines, Carlo de Fornaro's 'Carranza and Mexico' would be one of the sensations of the year. Even so, it is a story of vast interest to those who would learn the truth concerning the Mexican situation from a man who has supremely mastered it. The reading of it will give a vivid and intensely clear, if one-sided, view of the Mexican situation to date."

FIND WOMAN'S BODY IN BALL PARK SHED

Police Suspected Murder, but Autopsy Revealed Pneumonia as Cause of Death.

VICTIM IS UNIDENTIFIED

Broken Window in Hotel Adjoining Lenox Oval Disclosed How She Escaped from Her Room.

William Witzer, an employe of the Hotel Dolphin, Lenox Avenue and 145th Street, notified Patrolman Mohan, of the Lenox Avenue Station, yesterday morning that the body of a young woman had been found in a shed in Lenox Oval, a baseball park, to which one entrance is through the hotel. The patrolman hurried back with Witzer, who pointed to a shed built under the grand stand of the park for storage purposes. There he found the body of a neatly dressed woman, about 27 years old. Dr. Brasted, of Harlem Hospital, who was summoned, said she had been dead only a short while. Not a mark was found on the body.

The offices of the Coroner, District Attorney, and Central Office Detective Bureau were notified. Inspector Faurot, Assistant District Attorney Deacon Murphy, and Coroner Hellenstein arrived at the ball park almost at the same time.

The baseball grounds where the young woman died are leased by the Lincoln Stars, a negro baseball team, which played there on Thursday. However, it was learned from William Driscow, keeper of the Oval, that no white spectators were admitted, so far as he knew. He said he locked the main entrance at 6:30 o'clock the evening preceding, and according to the management, of the Hotel Dolphin the entrance through that building also was locked at 6 o'clock.

From Witzer the police learned the body was found by Walter Dooley, 17 years old, who was at work yesterday morning clearing the baseball diamond. The boy told the police he went into the shed to get out of the rain. While there he heard some one knocking on the outside, and moaning. He opened the door and found a young woman standing there with an umbrella raised and her coat hanging on her arm. She was frothing at the mouth, and trembling from head to foot. The boy helped her into the shanty and went back to his work. Soon afterward he looked into the shed and was so alarmed by the condition of the woman that he decided to inform Witzer, whom he knew.

While this story was being told by the lad, the police found persons in the hotel who identified her as a woman who had registered there during the night with a man, as Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, New York City, and assigned to Room 12.

The door of that room was locked when the detectives tried to get in, but they obtained a pass key and gained entrance. The room was empty, and the key lay on the bureau. A window with one of the panes broken was open, and through this window the detectives found that the occupants of the room probably had stepped out on a balcony from which there was a stairway leading down into the Oval.

After a superficial examination of the body, the Coroner decided the circumstances were so suspicious he directed an autopsy. The body was removed to the Morgue, and Dr. Otto H. Schultze, Medical Examiner for the District Attorney, began an examination.

Inspector Faurot and the detectives gathered in several witnesses while the autopsy was in progress, and toward night they said they were ready to make arrests if it was disclosed the young woman had died of poisoning. One of the suspects, according to the police, had strands of a woman's hair, the color of the victim's, tangled about a button of his coat. While the Inspector and the men and the Assistant District Attorney were waiting, however, Dr. Schultze telephoned that the autopsy disclosed that the young woman had died of pneumonia.

The police did not ascertain her identity, but they were informed she lived in the neighborhood of 145th and 147th Streets and Eighth Avenue. She was 5 feet 6 inches high, weighed 125 pounds, and had brown hair and blue eyes. Two of her right upper jaw teeth were gold-crowned and several lower jaw teeth were missing. She wore a blue coat, blue serge skirt, black patent-leather shoes with brown cloth tops, and a red straw hat trimmed with dark blue velvet and two black feathers. On her left hand were two gold rings, one set with a white stone and the other with blue stones. On her left wrist was a gold bracelet.

Pleads Guilty to Astor Threats.

John J. Muriella, who was arrested in the Grand Central Station by William Dobbyn, Vincent Astor's secretary, after letters threatening Mr. Astor's life unless $500 was paid to the writer, were received, pleaded guilty to attempted blackmail yesterday before Judge Swann in General Sessions. Sentence was adjourned for one week. Muriella may get seven and a half years for his crime.

OFFER TSING-TAO TO CHINA.

Japanese Said to Hold Out Port as Price of Concessions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TIEN-TSIN, April 30. (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—I understand that Japan is offering to restore Tsing-tao to China if the latter accepts the revised demands as presented conditionally. These include the opening of Tsing-tao as a treaty port with the extensive Japanese settlement, customs, telegraphs, and railways remaining in Japanese control.

PEKING, April 30.—The Chinese statesmen will meet the Japanese plenipotentiaries tomorrow, when they will present China's reply to the last list of demands submitted by the Tokio Government.

There is reason to believe that the Chinese answer will contain only a limited number of further concessions.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Viscount Chinda, the Japanese Ambassador, had another long conference today with Secretary Bryan, presumably on the Japanese-Chinese negotiations. Both officials adhered rigidly to the policy of secrecy mutually agreed upon early in the negotiations.

While no inkling has been given of the course to be followed by the United States with respect to the new demands, those familiar with the previous course of American policy believe some further modification may be urged before the demands can be construed as not affecting the administrative independence of China.

It is believed that one of the subjects being considered is Japan's demand for the right to propagate Buddhism in China. The article lately presented to China asks only for the recognition of that right, leaving to discussion at a future date the manner of its introduction in China under Japanese influence. American missionaries are interested in that feature, being as in possible conflict with their own work, and some common ground of understanding, it is said, is now being sought by Secretary Bryan.

The attitude of the United States on the new demands remains an official secret. Secretary Bryan has kept President Wilson advised of the recent developments and has communicated to him the substance of his conversations with the Japanese Ambassador.

Surety Company Must Pay.

Stanley W. Dexter, as Special Commissioner for M. & L. Jarmulowsky, private bankers, at 165 East Broadway, has reported that the American Bonding Company of Baltimore should pay to Eugene Lamb Richards, receiver for the bank, $100,000, as provided for in the bond which the surety company made to the State Controller.

Megantic to Take Troops.

When the White Star liner Megantic arrived yesterday from Liverpool, Captain G. R. Metcalfe received a message from the office of the company, 9 Broadway, that he was to leave as soon as the coal had been put on board, without stopping to take on stores. The Megantic has been chartered by the British Admiralty, and will proceed early today direct to Halifax to embark Canadian troops, it was said.

Coney Island Cycle Path Race.

Amateur bicyclists throughout the Metropolitan district are looking forward with interest to the revival of the Coney Island Cycle Path handicap race of twenty-five miles, which will be held on Memorial Day morning by the Empire City Wheelmen, Inc., of Brooklyn. It is eight years since this race, once the classic of the cycling world, was last contested, and fond memories were recalled by many bicycle riders when announcement was made that the event would be held this year. Because of the remarkable interest in the event, this race promises to be the best for amateurs in many years and comes only a short time before the selection of the bike riders who will represent the East in the Panama Pacific Exposition races.

The first Brooklyn cycle path race was contested in 1893 and was held annually thereafter until 1907 when it was discontinued. It has been held under the auspices of about half a dozen organizations.

Among the contestants in past years were such prominent riders, many of them now professionals, as John Bedell, Joe Fogler, Clarence Carmen, the motor paced champion of last year; Cameron and Weintz, who represented the United States in the London Olympics; Becht, Kopsky and Steinert, who went to Stockholm in 1912; Oliver Durland, Secles, and many others.

HUNTER BROOKE DIES ON MOTHER'S GRAVE

LEAVES WEEK-OLD BABY

Had Lived with Bride of a Year in Garden City—Health Impaired by Overwork.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 30.—J. Hunter Brooke, Jr., forty years old, secretary and treasurer of the Weyman-Bruton Snuff & Tobacco Company, 50 Union Square, New York, and a member of a family well known locally in this city and Media, was found dead today upon his mother's grave in the Media cemetery. According to the police, Mr. Brooke shot himself in the head last night. A revolver containing five loaded cartridges and a discharged cartridge was found on the grave beside him. His hat, umbrella and overcoat were near by. Deputy Coroner W. C. Rigby of Media, this afternoon, after a conference with relatives, said that Mr. Brooke was a suicide.

Mr. Brooke lived in Garden City, L. I. He married last May Miss Elisabeth Hepburn Ball, daughter of George Meredith Ball, of 214 Pelham Road, Germantown. Mrs. Brooke became the mother of a daughter a week ago today.

Mrs. Brooke left his New York office yesterday morning without saying where he was going. His absence was not regarded as significant, for he often had been away for a day on business. The other officials of the company did not become alarmed until late this morning when he failed to return. They telephoned to Mr. Brooke's house in Garden City. Mrs. Brooke was surprised to hear that her husband was not in his office. A few minutes later a message reached the office from Media, telling of Mr. Brooke's death.

Albert C. Broadbelt, Superintendent of the cemetery, and his wife were walking through the grounds at 8 o'clock last night, when they heard a shot. It was followed by a second report. They hurried to the scene, and this morning ... found Hunter Brooke, Jr., lying dead on his mother's grave.

It was not generally known that Mr. Brooke had come to Media. According to the relatives detained in New York, Mr. Brooke did not own a revolver. The police think that he bought the weapon on his way from New York.

Mr. Brooke left Media about twenty years ago, and until his marriage lived with a sister, Mrs. John Braden Austin, in Garden City. Mr. Brooke's grandfather, H. Jones Brooke, built Brooke Hall, a school for young women, in Media, where Mrs. McKinley, wife of the President, was educated.

Mr. Brooke obtained employment as an assistant auditor of the American Snuff and Tobacco Company when he left Media. He worked his way up, and when the company dissolved some years ago and the Weyman-Bruton Company was formed, Mr. Brooke became Secretary and Treasurer of this concern. Mr. Brooke had worked so hard that his health became impaired.

J. Hunter Brooke lived in Fifth Street, in Garden City. His sister, Mrs. Austin, and her husband started for Media on the receipt of the suicide. A sister of Mrs. Brooke also lives in Garden City. She is Mrs. George P. Lawrence, Mr. Lawrence said yesterday that Mr. Brooke was in good spirits the last time he saw him. Mr. Brooke is the third well known resident of Garden City to commit suicide since Christmas. The other two were Robert Lee, who shot himself in a sanitarium in New York, and Hannath Gardiner, the son of Clement E. Gardiner, who shot himself in Cleveland about two months ago.

MRS. HARRIMAN TO APPEAL.

Will Take Idaho Tax Case to the Supreme Court.

BOISE, Idaho, April 30.—Appeal to the United States Supreme Court, it was said today, probably would be taken from the decision of Probate Judge Dunlap in overruling a demurrer made by Mrs. E. H. Harriman yesterday in a suit brought by the State against Mrs. Harriman and the Oregon Short Line Railroad to collect a transfer tax on the estate of the late E. H. Harriman.

Mr. Harriman was a large stockholder of the Union Pacific Railway system, which owns the Oregon Short Line, and had millions of dollars worth of property in Idaho. The defense contends that the State cannot collect the transfer tax because the railroad is a foreign corporation.

8 YEARS FOR EX-POLICEMAN.

Abe Bernstein Sentenced for Robbing Mt. Vernon Collector.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 30.—"You were convicted of a terrible robbery which might have resulted in murder. That you, once a policeman, should take part in this crime instead of trying to prevent it is inexcusable. But as you have aided the District Attorney by your confession I shall be somewhat lenient," said Judge William P. Platt today when he sentenced Abe Bernstein, a former New York policeman, to from eight to twelve years in Sing Sing for assault and robbery on William Hobby, former Police Commissioner of Mount Vernon.

Hobby, who is a brewery collector, visited the saloon of Dominick Nucera last November, and Bernstein, Veto Gennerio, and Nucera attacked him with clubs and knives. Hobby fought, but he was clubbed into insensibility and robbed of his watch and $1,500 cash. It took thirty-two stitches to close up his scalp wounds.

To the scholar and the student, to the man of broad culture and to those whose nativity makes them kin to the giants of the World-Academy, the German and French sections of Macy's Book Department offer a field rich in "finds."

Priced so reasonably as to attract the reader of even the most modest means, the collections included range from handy paper-covered editions of moderns to classics distinguished by a Continental elegance of binding not yet attained in the United States.

The bound volumes (though of modest price), are handsome enough to grace any library; the covers and backs will stand more handling than anything made in this country; the paper is strong and the type clean-cut, readable and artistic.

The book-lover will be amply repaid for a little browsing in our Book Department.

IN GERMAN

Collected Works of

Goethe, Schiller, Heine, Reuter, Lessing, Ibsen.

Novels of Carnegie Commission Pensions Dependents of Some Who Lost Their Lives.

MERE CHILDREN WIN HONOR

Grants of $25,000 Made for Education and $30,500 for the Purchase of Homes.

PITTSBURGH, April 30.—At the Spring meeting of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission today, fifty-two acts of heroism in many parts of the country were recognized. In two cases gold medals were awarded; in fourteen cases, silver medals, and in thirty-six, bronze medals.

Ten of the heroes lost their lives; and to the dependents of four of these pensions aggregating $2,760 a year were granted. To the dependents of five of the others who lost their lives sums amounting to $3,500, to be applied, subject to the direction of the commission, in various ways, were granted. In addition to these money grants, in thirteen cases sums aggregating $25,000 were appropriated for educational purposes, payments to be made as needed and approved; and in twenty-nine cases awards aggregating $30,500 were made to be applied toward the purchase of homes, and to other worthy purposes. Payments in these cases will not be made until the beneficiaries' plans for the use of the award have been approved by the commission. The awards were as follows:

Gets Seven Years for Forgery.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., April 30.—Admitting two charges of passing worthless checks, Frank Marveck, 40 years of age, of 520 East Seventy-ninth Street, New York City, was this afternoon sentenced to seven years in State Prison by Judge Peter F. Daly. The police allege that sixteen checks in all were given to foreign storekeepers by Marveck, and in every case they were "certified" and were drawn for $27.

Report It Self-Supporting.

Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., on behalf of the Committee on Public Kitchens of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, have made public the first report on the operation of the People's Kitchen, which was established for the sale of hot cooked food to be taken home for family use.

The kitchen, which is located at 453 West Twenty-seventh Street, in the heart of the longshoremen's district, opened its doors on Feb. 22. From that date to April 15, a period of forty-five days, it served approximately 24,016 portions of food, averaging 4 cents per portion, for which it received $961.67. This is equivalent to a daily average income of $21.37, and means that the kitchen is being operated on a self-supporting basis.

	Price.		Price.
Cereal	2c.	Rolls or sweet buns	2c.
Split pea soup	3c.	Ginger bread	2c.
Baked beans	3c.	Stewed fruits	3c.
Corned beef, cabbage, potatoes	7c.	Baked indian pudding	2c.

In discussing the work of the committee, Mrs. Burden said:

"The significant thing concerning the People's Kitchen is that, as a permanent agency, it is unlike the many movements which were started last Winter as relief measures. We felt that the committee could perform a wider social service by establishing something of permanent value, and at the same time relieve the pressure caused by the serious unemployment situation. The kitchen is being used even more now than during the Winter, as those in the neighborhood become acquainted with its service.

The members of the Public Kitchens Committee are Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., Chairman; Miss Charlotte Barnes, Miss Beatrice Bend, Mrs. Ernesto Fabbri, Miss Marion Hollins, Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, Miss Ruth Twombly, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. James Watson Webb, and Mrs. William Laimbeer. Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., is ex officio a member of the committee. Edward F. Brown, the Executive Secretary of the School Lunch Committee of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, is also the Executive Secretary of this committee.

The school of application for infantry officers of the Third and Fourth Brigades is to be held in Peekskill from June 5 to June 25, with Company F of the Seventy-first Infantry on duty as the school company.

NIGHT MASS 14 YEARS OLD.

Anniversary to be Celebrated on May 8 at St. Andrew's.

The fourteenth anniversary of the institution of the 2:30 A. M. mass for newspaper men and nightworkers at St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Church, in Duane Street, will be celebrated on Sunday, May 8, by a solemn high mass, sung by the rector, Mgr. Luke J. Evers. Since the institution of this service at St. Andrew's seventeen other early morning masses have become a fixture in their respective places, the last city to fall in line being Baltimore, Md.

The musical program, prepared by the organist, Joseph Bietiger, will consist of Mercadante's Mass, and the soolists will be Mme. d'Reymonte, soprano; Rosemario Campbell, contralto; James J. Walsh, tenor, and Francis Motley, basso.

Augusto Brandt, the violinist, is a pupil of the Royal Conservatory, Brussels, and recently arrived from Belgium. He is 22 years old and took first prize at the conservatory under Cesar Thomson. The sermon will be preached by a missionary priest. No tickets are required.

The time for raising the fund has been extended to May 15.

FAIL, SAYS CHURCHILL

Tells Columbia Conference That Pupils Are Not Fitted for Their Places in Life.

PUTS BLAME ON TEACHERS

Lay Members of Board Hampered by Pedagogues Busy Defending Their System and Acts.

President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education said yesterday afternoon at the discussion of education which closed a series of conferences on the government of New York City at Havemeyer Hall, Columbia University, that the public schools were perfect, viewed as a system, but that they were doing very badly the work of equipping children to play their part in life.

Mr. Churchill said that the history of education showed periods of revolution, which were flolowed by eras of reorganization ,and then by a time when the reorganization became too complete and the new system worked too smoothly. Then, he said, the system gradually became an institution which was reverenced for its own sake and became an unfit instrument for training children into capable and useful men and women. The public school system of New York City, he said, was now in this latter state.

Mr. Churchill quoted Micheal Friedsam, President of B. Altman & Co., who said that he had made a close study of many boys and girls, graduates of the public schools in this city, and had found them not only poorly equipped, but lacking in energy and the will to succeed.

This charge against the New York school system, he said, has been made by business men for many years, and the demand for a reorganization has been growing more impressive from year to year. It led, he said, to the survey of the city school system directed by Dr. Hanus in 1911, in which the defects of the systems were put in a striking light. While the lay members of the Board of Education, he said, were fighting to make the public school system an instrument suited to its purposes, he said the limited powers of the board enabled it to make only slow progress against the organization of Principals, Superintendients, and other members of the school system, "a system," he said, "which had been developed more for the purpose of maintaining itself and defending its acts than for serving the public."

One of the specific faults of the system complained of b ybusiness men, Mr. Churchill said, was that hours, days, and weeks were wasted teaching pupils business arithmetic which had become obsolete and had been in disuse for years. Another trouble, he said, was the failure to teach essential subjects thoroughly. Mr. Friedsam and other business men who had studied graduates of the New York school system, he said, complained that the pupils were deficient in addition, writing, and reading.

Mr. Churchill said that in 1890 only seven subjects were taught in the 1sth grade, two of them being reading and writing. Reading and writing have since been dropped, he said, but four other subjects have been added.

"I have just had the records looked up," he said, "to show how many minutes a week the teachers in the last grade had n 1890 for optional use and how many they had in 1912. I receved the figures today. In 1890 the teacher had 675 minutes a week for optional use. This gave time to drill a class in yhtpose studies in which it was weak. In 1912 the teacher of the last grade had 45 minutes a week for optional use.

"In all the other classes the optional time has been cut down since 1890 in about the same proportion, because of the number of subjects added. This means that today the manner in which the teacher shall use almost every minute of her time is prescribed for her. She has no initiative. This deprives the pupils of the vitalization of study which comes when there is a chance for a teacher to impress her work with her own enthusiasm and personality."

Two fundamental errors in the system, Mr. Churchill said, were, first, that the entire system was regulated from above to dovetail with the universities on the theory that the exclusive aim of the public school was to give children the foundation on which to build a scholastic education, and, second, that the system took its character from early times in this country when books were scarce and expensive and book lore was difficult of access to the ordinary student outside of the classroom and after his school days. The theory was still embedded in the school system, he said, that the reading of the average student would be limited to the schoolroom, in spite of libraries and cheap books.

The high school system of the city, he said, was particularly a product of the pedagogical closet and conspicuously failed to prepare students for life. The high schools, he said, were under the influence of the idea that the preparation of students for college was done exclusively by private academies, which were supposed to be attended by a kind of aristocracy of bright children whose parents had money.

Efforts of the Board of Education, he said, to bring the high schools into a sensible relation with the community were repulsed by the powerful pedagogical machine in control of the high schools. One of the chief aims of the present Board of Education, he said, was "to rid the schools of the absurd Brahminism which now dominates it."

START SERVICE TO FRISCO.

Panama-Pacific Liner Finland Sails with 460 Tourists Today.

The new service from New York to San Francisco by the Panama-Pacific Line will be inaugurated today by the sailing of the liner Finland with 460 tourists bound for the California expositions. Among her passengers will be Dr. John E. Bailey, Mrs. Lansdale Boardman, George E. Chamberlain, Sydney E. Huntington, Dr. Charles F. Lindsay, Mrs. Grant Squires, Thomas Hunt Talmage, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Walbridge.

Up for Failing to Pay Fine.

Charles Bright, a promoter, whose home is in Uruguay, was arrested yesterday and locked up in Ludlow Street Jail for failing to pay a fine of $250 for contempt of court.

The National Railway Construction Company got a judgment against Bright in April, 1914, and he was ordered to deliver to the London branch of the London and Brazilian Bank on demand 200 gold debenture bonds of the Pan-American Transcontinental Railway Company, having a face value of $1,000 and with 5 per cent. coupons attached, and stock of the company having a face value of $100,000. He failed to obey and the contempt proceedings were instituted.

Bright said the stock and bonds had been removed by some unknown person from his home in Uruguay. He showed to reporters an open letter addressed to John D. Rockefeller, whom he accused of trying to get control of certain railway properties in South America. He sought to prove this statement by calling attention to the fact that the firm of Murray, Prentice & Harland are counsel for the plaintiff, E. Parmelee Prentice of the firm is Mr. Rockefeller's son-in-law.

In the Federal court Dr. Arrago Vidal Paris sued Bright, the South American Securities Company, the National Railway Construction Company, and the Pan-American Trancontinental Company for commissions amounting to $3,500,000. John J. McKelvey and A. H. Favour sued Bright for 20 per cent. of the commissions obtained through the organization of the South American Securities Company and the Pan-American Transcontinental Company, both of which, in a third suit, are seeking to have declared void the securities held by Bright.

ROB STORE OF ANTIQUITIES.

Burglars Despoil De Rustafjaell's Fifth Avenue Shop.

The police were notified last night that burglars had entered the antique jewelry store of Robert de Rustafjaell, at 734 Fifth Avenue, on Thursday night and carried off $2,000 worth of jewelry, bric-a-brac, and oil paintings. The loss was discovered yesterday morning when the store was opened for business.

Detective Flaherty of the Second Branch Detective Bureau, who is investigating the case, said the intruders had probably gained entrance to the building, which is L-shaped and extends to Fifty-seventh Street, through a vacant store on the Fifty-seventh Street side.

IN GREEK GAMES

Sophomores Vanquish Freshman, Though Both Implore Apollo's Aid.

TORCH RACE TWICE LOST

Youngsters Also Carry Off Chariot Honors in Columbia Gym—Score 57 1-2 to 52 1-2.

A contest of Greek games, including feats of song, dance, poetry, and athletics, was won by the sophomores of Barnard College over the freshmen by a score of 57½ to 52½ yesterday afternoon. The games were held in the gymnasium of Columbia University, filled by more than 1,600 spectators, including members of the other classes, alumnae and specially invited guests. Young men students of Columbia, who would have liked to help root for the struggling teams, lingered around the gymnasium as the Barnard girls came and departed, while persons in the streets surrounding the building peeked through the high iron fence.

Preceding the tests of strength and physical endurance, the young women gave impersonations of the deities of ancient Greece, but when the final score was announced the sophomores stepped down from their classic pedestal and started a regular old-fashioned snake dance, in which the freshmen, too, joined impusively.

The two classes competed for the most impressive entrance into the arena. The freshmen came first in all kinds of ancient Greek costumes, which even the judges were forced to admit seemed more attractive because hung about the shoulders of American girls.

Implore Apollo's Aid.

Before this procession entered a prayer was sung to Apollo and Artemis. The line was headed by flower girls, and after them came a chorus, singing the praises of Apollo. In turn the athletes and populace entered, singing the praises of Artemis. Artemis and Apollo were invoked to lend their aid for the freshmen. For all this the freshmen were credited with six points.

The sophomores, entering next, were preceded by flower girls and a chorus, also singing praises to Apollo and Artemis. In this they scored their first victory, winning eleven points.

The freshmen "came back" strong in the competition in chorus and dance. Florence Barber, who wrote the music for the dance, received a laurel crown, and Hildegrade Diechmann, 1918, was crowned for the best serious lyric, and Marian Washburn, 1918, for the best comic lyric. Katherine Harrower, 1917, also won honors for a serious lyric.

The sophomores won the dance contest, the munsic for which was written by Geraldine Krause and Dorothy Leet, and the words by Babette Deutsch. The dancers crowned were Minna Lederman, Helen Leet, Muriel Terry. The young women showed much prowess in the athletic events, which included, hurdling, discus hurling, running leap, torch race, hoop rolling, relay race, and chariot race.

Chariot Race Was Keen.

The chariot race was especially praiseworthy. The sophomores was driven by Sabina Rogers, who wore a flaming terra cotta cloak and cracked a long whip as she urged her team forward around the course. Her team consisted of Marietta Lott, Solveig Stromsoe, Hilda Rau, and Ruth Jansen.

The freshman team, driven by Isabel Greenbaum, in a blue cloak, was made up of Ethel Dawbarn, Frieda Kenyon, Marion Levy, and Mimosa Pfaltz. The race was won by the freshmen.

The torch race was another interesting spectacle. Soon after the teams started around the course the torch carried by the sophomore runner went out, and while it was being relit the freshmen scored a victory. The sophmores wanted to run the contest over, but the freshmen even then were invincible in this event.

The judges of the chorus were Professor Cornelius Rubner and David Bispham; dances, Miss Elizabeth Duncan, Miss A. Clerton, and Miss Yunck; costuming, Professor Wheeler, Mrs. T. Leslie Shear, and Mr. Sargent. The judges of the athletic contests were Lillian Schoedler, Helen Dana, Elinor Mayer, Isabel Randolf, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Fisher.

WARNS HEIRS AGAINST DRINK

William A. Mapes, a temperance advocate, after leaving $24,656 to his daughter, Bertha, and $19,656 to each of his sons, Howell and William, Jr., expressed in his willl the wish that they would refrain from the use of alsoholic beverages and never gamble or take chances in any betting or gaming scheme.

Mrs. Ida C. Mapes, the widow, received $4,000, with the explanation that the sum was small because she possessed sufficient wealth to remain in comfort during her life. The will was contested by the widow, but a compromise was effected.

It all came to publi cnotice yesterday when the appraisal of the estate was filed in the office of the State Controller. The report shows a net estate of $64,969, of which $57,384 was in stock of the Park Versailles Realty Company.

Lobster Suppers Do Not Cause Indigestion

Just because you have been pampering a "delicate digestion" for years is no reason why you should not begin to-day to eat the rich, delicious, nourishing food you crave. Try one mere good dinner, sipping with it a glass or two of Man-a-cea, a delicious, refreshing mineral water that stimulates the secretion of digestive fluids and checks stomach and intestinal disturbances by natural means. Man-a-cea is not a laxative, and, while highly effective, is so free from any medicinal taste as to make a superb table water. Served at clubs, hotels and restaurants. Sold by druggists and first-class grocers. Money back if it fails to relieve.

HARPER'S BOOKS

The Turmoil

By Booth Tarkington

First as to sales in thirty-eight places out of forty-two. These figures are the impartial dealers' reports to the May Bookman, regarded as official by the entire trade. For three months "The Turmoil" has been the best selling book in America.

First Pals

By Francis Perry Elliott

If you are one of the many thousand readers who are especially fond of mystery or detective stories, take advice and get a copy of "First Pals." This is a most baffling mystery story in which you either make up your mind quickly how the mystery is solved, or are convinced that the next page will disclose it. Nevertheless, you will have to read as far as page 321 before the author solves it for you, and then you will find it is not at all as you had imagined it would be. In addition to this, there is a very sweet love story.

The Life Builders

By Elizabeth Dejeans

Who is the more conservative—man or woman—when it is a question of home and marriage? This is the question which the author asks, the theme of her clean and earnest romance of a vital, gracious, and graceful woman, who dreamed of marriage based on genuine love upon which husband and wife should build toward an ideal future. The author's handling of the question is unusual, but full of insight into the differences in masculine and feminine nature.

Johnny Appleseed

By Eleanor Atkinson

A sympathetic story of a real character into whose unusual personality the author has succeeded in penetrating as she did into the dog nature of the real "Greyfriars Bobby." All the romance of our early frontier life fills the pages, not the fighting only, but the upbuilding, the conquering of the forests, the making of the wilderness blossom.

Hollow Tree Stories

By Albert Bigelow Paine

For little readers—in six little volumes—the ever popular stories of the quaint Deep Woods creatures are just issued in small single volumes, in addition to the older books. The six volumes are: "How Mr. Dog Got Even"; "How Mr. Rabbit Lost His Tail"; "Mr. Rabbit's Big Dinner"; "Making Up with Mr. Dog"; "Mr. Possum's Great Balloon Trip."; "When Jack Rabbit Was a Little Boy."

IS FINALLY UPHELD

Mason-Seaman Company Loses Its Fight in the Appellate Division.

ALL TAXIS PUBLIC HACKS

Justice Cohalan, Who Refused Injunction to Restrain City Regulations, Is Sustained.

The Mason-Seaman Transportation Company, which owns and operates more than 500 taxicabs in this city, was decisively beaten in the courts yesterday, when the Appellate Division ruled unanimously that the company is not entitled to an injunction restraining the city officials from enforcing the Public Hack ordinance as amended by the Board of Aldermen on Jan. 2.

The decision means that the company must obtain a license for each cab before the vehicle is permitted to carry a taximeter and use the streets of the city through which to carry passengers. It makes a taxicab legally a public hack and amenable to the laws affecting such conveyance.

The Mason-Seaman Company made the fight not only in its own behalf, but practically for all taxi owners operating such vehicles from private garages, hotels or ferries, and railroad depots. The decision, therefore, means that all taxis must obey the ordinance.

The taxi company took the ground that the ordinance was unconstitutional in that it interfered with its private hack business and was therefore class legislation.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Terence Farley, who handled the case for the city, recited in his brief that many of our cities that the ordinance as it now stands requires that the character of chauffeurs operating taxis be inquired into before a license is granted.

Mr. Farley said yesterday that the decision was a final, sweeping victory, and that there is little likelihood of the company going to the Court of Appeals, although the Appellate Division has the power of permitting such a proceeding.

"This settles the whole thing," he said. "It puts a stop to the practice of cheating the public by the maintenance of private garages near the big hotels and railroad stations. This practice was only a blind. Passengers rode in those so-called private taxicabs believing them to be under city regulation, only to find at the end of the journey that the rate was higher than the prescribed rates, and that after all the taxicab was not a public vehicle."

NEW BOAT FOR MANKOWSKI.

Racing Motor Craft Will Be Equipped with Twin 225 H. P. Engines.

Count Casimer Mankowski, owner of the motorboat Ankle Deep, which has taken part in two races for the Harmsworth trophy against representatives of Great Britain, has under course of construction another craft which is destined to be much more powerful than Ankle Deep. It will be known as Ankle Deep Too" and from the present intentions of Count Mankowski will be entered in every event of importance during the coming season where high speed boats are to be brought together. The new racing craft is of unusual design, drafted by Tams, Lemoine & Crane, and will carry two Sterling engines, which have been built to deliver to 250 horsepower each.

Count Mankowski recently saw the engines which will form the power plant of the "Ankle Deep Too" put through a severe test, which included endurance runs to determine steadiness of power, even running tests to obtain the maxamum power, and a test to determine the amount of power delivered at varying revolutions.

In deference to the English idea of muffling the exhausts on a racing boat, as exemplified by the wonderfully quiet, smooth-running "Mable Leaf IV.," further tests were made to determine the degree of additional power with open exhausts. Count Mankowski was pleased with the results of the various tests. New Yorkers will receive an opportunity of seeing this boat in action during the Gold Cup races scheduled to be held at Manhasset Bay, Long Island, the latter part of July.

PLANNED FOR FLEET

Tentative Program Aims to Make Naval Visit a Joy to Officers and Men.

THEATRES AND BALL GAMES

President to be City's Guest and Review Naval Brigade and Fleet at Anchor.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chairman of the Citizens' Committee appointed by Mayor Mitchel to arrange for the reception and entertainment of the officers and men of the Atlantic Fleet, announced yesterday the tentative program agreed upon by the Executive Committee of the Mayor's Committee, which was arranged following a conference held on Thursday at which Captain H. McL. P. Huse, U. S. N., Chief of Staff to Admiral Fletcher, the Commander in Chief of the Fleet, was present as a representative of the Admiral.

Among other interesting announcements was one that the dreadnoughts, pre-dreadnoughts, and destroyers of the Fleet will be illuminated during four of the nights that the armada is in the Hudson. The first illumination will be next Saturday night. The dreadnaughts and battleships will anchor in the Hudson in a column, beginning at Seventy-ninth Street, the anchorages being 500 yards apart.

The tentative program made public yesterday is as follows:

The fleet will arrive in the North River in the forenoon of May 8, 1915, and will moor into approximately the same anchorage occupied on the occasion of the President's review in October, 1912.

The United States flagship Wyoming will be anchored off Seventy-ninth Street, the Texas, Delaware, North Dakota, Kansas, Michigan, South Carolina, Florida, Utah, (Division Flagship,) Virginia, (Division Flagship,) Georgia, Rhode Island, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Louisiana, (Division Flagship.)

The flotillas of destroyers will be anchored on the west shore of the river, directly opposite the line of battleships.

The submarines will be moored alongside of the pier at 124th Street.

The number of ships present at the review will be approximately sixty. Below is a tentative program of events:

Saturday, May 8, 9 A. M.—Fleet arrives and anchors between 70th and 158th Sts.
11 A. M.—Mayor calls on the Admiral in command of the fleet.
2 P. M.—Admiral lands at West 24th St., and is escorted by platoon of mounted police to the City Hall, to return the call of the Mayor.
8 P. M.—Fleet illuminates until 11 P. M.

Sunday, May 9.—Arrangements are being made for special services in many of the city churches, the details of which will be announced later.
8 P. M.—Fleet is illuminated until 11 P. M.

Monday, May 10, 12:30 P. M.—Admiral and officers to take breakfast with Sons of the Revolution at Fraunce's Tavern. Baseball parties and theatre parties for enlisted men in the afternoon; theatre parties for enlisted men in the evening.

Tuesday, May 11.—Baseball parties and theatre parties for enlisted men in the afternoon; theatre parties for enlisted men in the evening.

Wednesday, May 12, 8 P. M.—Officers to attend dance on board U. S. S. Granite State. Baseball parties and theatre parties for enlisted men in the afternoon; theatre parties for enlisted men, in the evening.

Thursday, May 13, 8 P. M.—Athletic and vaudeville entertainments will be given for enlisted men.
9 P. M.—Reception for officers at the Union League Club.

Friday, May 14.—Baseball parties and theatre parties for enlisted men in the afternoon; theatre parties for enlisted men in the evening.

Saturday, May 15.—Baseball parties and theatre parties for enlisted men in the afternoon.
7 P. M.—Dinner to the Commander in Chief and officers of the navy.
8 P. M.—The fleet will be illuminated until 11 P. M. Theatre parties for the men in the evening.

Sunday, May 16.—Arrangements are being made for special services in many of the city churches, the details of which will be announced later.
8 P. M.—Fleet illuminated until 11 P. M.
12:30 P. M.—The President will be the guest of the City of New York at a luncheon.
3:30 P. M.—Mayflower reviews fleet at Anchor.
8:00 P. M.—Fleet will be illuminated to 11 P. M.

Tuesday, May 18, 10 A. M.—Fleet gets under way and proceeds to sea.

The visit of the fleet during the week preceding the President's review is for the purpose of affording leave and recreation to the personnel of the fleet, after several months' constant application to drills and target practice.

The program of entertainment has been limited to the above events, in order that the opportunities for individual liberty shall not be unduly interfered with.

The fleet will bring to New York about 26,000 officers and men. Two of the superdreadnoughts that are coming have never before been seen in a Presidential review. They are the New York and the Texas.

UNION ANSWERS SHANLEY.

But Evades His Inquiry If It Will Save Danbuhy Hatters' Homes.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., April 30.—A sharp challenge offered by the Rev. Dr. Walter Snanley, rector of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church of this city, to Martin Lawlor, Secretary-Treasurer of the United Hatters of North America, defying him to say how the union would protect the 187 members whose homes are under attachment to secure the $262,000 judgment in the famous Loewe case, caused the union official to break his long silence today.

In a statement issued by him Mr. Lawler calls the priest's previous attitrance "a vicious attack on the officers of the union," and also refers to a statement by D. E. Loewe & Co., who accused the officers of not standing by their men. Mr. Lawler says:

"The officers of the United Hatters of North America desire to state that whatever was done, or left undone, was for the best interest of the defendants and their organization, and we have no apologies to make to either D. E. Loewe or the reverend doctor for not taking them into our confidence. Both gentlemen express their great displeasure that the national officers have not handed over to D. E. Loewe & Co., on a silver platter, $30,000 with the compliments of the United Hatters of North America. By the peculiar action of a law (which the Congress and Senate of

Read these Opinions on the Great New Anonymous Novel

The Seas of God

Mrs. Edwin Markham writes:—

"'The Seas of God' presents with poignancy the love-history of a woman left without the shelter of home or society or church. This new novel has, however, a new setting, a new stress of emphasis, and ends with the note of regeneration."

"The story is told dramatically and with a certain distinction. One enjoys the flair and finish of the style of this anonymous author—a story teller with power to handle large aspects with ethical justice as well as to evoke atmosphere and project character."

Eleanor Gates writes:—

"Parents of grown, yet untrained, girls should not fail to read 'The Seas of God.'"

Temple Bailey writes:—

Dorothy Dix writes:—

"'The Seas of God' is a strong and gripping story that 'gets' you in the first chapter and holds you to the last."

"The theme of the book is one that is vitally interesting to every one who believes in the higher morality, for it teaches that the woman who has erred can come back if she desires to, and build a new, clear life on the wrecks of her old existence. It is a notable book, and if it is a first book, I think a new star has risen in the literary skies."

ALARM IN THE SUFFRAGE CAMP.

The votes-for-women cause in the State of New York is in peril and there is alarm in the camp. The alarm will grow as the nature and seriousness of the peril come to be understood. The Legislature has proposed for submission to the people an amendment to the Constitution giving the vote to women. That amendment will be voted upon by the people next November. But the Constitutional Convention, a higher power than the Legislature, may, perhaps without lifting a finger, nullify the amendment even if it should be ratified by the people. Section 1, Article III., of the present Constitution declares that "every male citizen of the age of 21 years" who fulfills the requirements as to residence within the State, county, and election districts, "shall be entitled to vote." The amendment upon which the people will vote on the next election day removes the limitation to male citizens only and gives the vote to women as well. But Section 3 of Article XIV. of the present Constitution says:

> Any amendment proposed by a Constitutional Convention relating to the same subject as an amendment proposed by the Legislature, coincidentally submitted to the people for approval at the general election held in the year 1894 or at any subsequent election, shall, if approved, be deemed to supersede the amendment so proposed by the Legislature.

If the Convention amends in any manner, except in the manner desired by the suffragists, Section 1 of Article III., that section would then be submitted to the people as an amendment to the Constitution, and it would appear to fall within the scope and intent of Section 3 of Article XIV., and so would supersede the woman suffrage amendment submitted by the Legislature, even if that amendment should be ratified. But even if no change whatever should be made in Section 1, Article III., it is very doubtful whether the effect would not be the same. In a Constitutional Convention, made up of their elected delegates, the people speak with highest authority. Their voice is there supreme because in the Constitution they may limit at their pleasure the powers of their Legislature. If the Convention is silent in respect to woman suffrage, there will be before the people next November a section of the Constitution in two forms, conflicting in language, contrary in intent. It may easily be supposed that the courts would take the view that the voice of the people as heard through their Constitutional Convention must be followed, that the amendment submitted merely by legislative approval, even if ratified, must be held void and of no effect. And that would the more certainly be the view of the court if no change is made in Section 3, Article XIV. The Constitution is to be considered as a whole. Everything contained in the present Constitution left unchanged by the Convention, everything altered or amended, and all new matter must be accepted as the work of this Convention. When its labors are concluded the entire instrument will in fact and by controlling implication have received its approval. It would certainly seem, therefore, that a male suffrage constitution ratified at the same time as a female suffrage amendment would be accepted as the supreme law of the State and the suffrage amendment would go by the board.

We do not see what difference the resolution introduced by Mr. Herbert Parsons would make. That resolution provided that the Convention should refrain from any action on the question of suffrage. That would be a sane resolution, while the final deliberate intent of the Convention would be sought for by the courts in the provisions of the Constitution itself. The suffragists have no reason to expect that the Convention is very deeply moved by a desire to oblige them. It is not quite conceivable that it would of its own motion insert the woman suffrage amendment. It might not even [illegible] of inserting a special provision declaring that the woman suffrage amendment, if adopted, should become part of the Constitution. That would be a way out, but it is one the Convention is little likely to take. It is a situation, not a theory, that confronts the suffragists.

THE ROCKAWAYS.

The granting of a franchise at yesterday's meeting of the Board of Estimate for the operation of a new omnibus line in the Rockaways showed that the Mayor has made up his mind about the Rockaway secession bill. He will veto it. The opposition to it among Rockaway property owners in the recent hearing showed that the sentiment of the "peninsula" is by no means unanimous. Property within the city limits will always be more valuable than property beyond the line. The financial features of the objectionable bill are preposterous. Controller Prendergast's condemnation of them is none too severe. It is to be hoped that the Rockaway and Arverne folks will view their foolish proposal in the light of reason within the next year and devote their energies to securing such improvements as they must have through the government of the city.

The annexation for which they voted so eagerly has greatly increased the importance of their neighborhood. They have grievances, like the people of all the other boroughs, including Manhattan. They are anxious to quicken the wheels of progress. So are we all. With patience and energy they can get all they ask for in time. Meanwhile, they are not so badly off as they have permitted themselves to believe. If they had succeeded in putting themselves back to the condition in which they were before the annexation they would not have been happy. Indeed, we are convinced that all of them except a few politicians would have been exceedingly unhappy.

EXAGGERATED COST OF WAR.

Mr. Gardin of the National City Bank thinks, with many others, that the destruction of wealth in Europe is creating problems which will seem insurmountable when the world is again at peace and begins to cast up the account of war. The destruction so far, he says, has been estimated at 46 billion dollars, "an amount of "money that is absolutely inconceiv-"able." In terms of money, it is an amount that cannot be conceived. It is about three times all the gold, silver, and paper money there is in the civilized world. In terms of economic wealth it is a possible sum, and yet one cannot really imagine it. One can say 46 billion dollars easily enough, and visualize it as a row of figures; one cannot visualize 46 billion dollars' worth of property. The total capitalization of all the railroads in the United States is less than 20 billion dollars. One cannot imagine wealth equivalent to the value of 350,000 miles of railroad, with equipment and stations, being quite destroyed in the space of nine months.

Not only, as Mr. Gardin says, is 46 billion dollars an inconceivable amount of money, but the destruction of wealth in the conceivable economic sum of 46 billion dollars is in itself an inconceivable matter. Therein lies a ray of hope. Possibly it has not taken place, at least not in the way in which people are trying to suppose. If the world actually were 46 billion dollars poorer than it was nine months ago—if goods and wealth to that aggregate value had vanished away—then surely the whole world would be already in want. That is not the case. The system of distribution has broken down in places, and there has been much suffering on that account, but there is yet enough for all to eat and wear, and enough continues to be produced to supply all human needs. Surely, therefore, something happens to offset the destruction of wealth itself and of the means of producing it, and possibly the amount of destruction is overestimated, to begin with. And, in truth, there are both offsets and exaggerations.

One of the biggest offsets is the saving people practice on account of war. Immediately in Great Britain it became fashionable for the rich to sit down to a one-course dinner, and housewives all over Europe were instructed by their Governments in ways of saving food, down even to potato peelings. If economy so painstaking had been practiced for a generation in Europe more capital would have been saved than could safely have been invested. Instead, the whole world had been practicing wild extravagance, saving almost nothing, even borrowing on the future, so that when there came the incentive of war to save there was great room for it. It is easy to calculate the outlay of war in dollars, because the spending is concentrated and shows; it is impossible to calculate the saving, because it is so widely diffused. But it is arguable that a very large proportion of the money cost of war is actually saved during the war. That would account for the immediate success of the huge popular war loans in England, Germany, and France.

The tale of destruction is always made to include the economic value of the life lost. Herein many fallacies abide. The economic value of man, in terms of money, or capitalized at 4 or 5 per cent., as you like, is, in the first place, an abstraction. It is unfair, in the second place, (not unfair to war, but statistically misleading,) to debit the account of destruction with the full economic value of all the life lost without deducting anything for the fact that if the men engaged in war had been peacefully occupied instead a great many would have died of natural causes. The difference between the mortality of war and that of peace is less than is imagined.

There is, of course, the destruction of tangible property. That is real enough, but the value is much more likely to be over than under estimated. And here, again, no allowance is made for the fact that there is a very high rate of property destruction in time of peace. The higher that rate is the more rapidly wealth increases. New York City is being continually rebuilt. In every direction you see buildings, far from the end of their economic utility, in process of demolition, making way for new and bigger ones. The physical wealth destroyed by war is never replaced as it was; it reappears in improved and more efficient forms.

The Napoleonic wars of a century ago were not actually so destructive as the present war, but relatively they were perhaps more destructive, as the stock of the world's wealth was then much smaller and the processes of reproducing it much slower. And yet, never did wealth increase so fast in the world as in the twenty-five years following the restoration of peace in Europe. Machinery helped. But man's mechanical genius is not yet bankrupt.

FELIPE EGALITE.

The letter of the aged soldier who ruled Mexico, according to his lights, for thirty years, to a young soldier whom he remembered as a cadet at Chapultepec, which the Carranza "publicity bureau" has just published, proves nothing except that Porfirio Díaz in his exile sincerely desires the re-establishment in Mexico of the kind of peace he bestowed upon it. Its receipt by Felipe Angeles certainly does not prove that Angeles is working to restore cientifico rule. Nor does the expression of Mr. Limantour's belief in the undying gratitude of Angeles, in his letter to Mr. de la Barra, published at the same time, prove anything. The letters are undoubtedly characteristic, and we need not speculate as to their authenticity. Mr. Limantour was quite sure a year ago that Villa was purchasable. What if he was, and received his purchase money thereafter? Assuredly he has not "delivered the goods." The situation in Mexico has not materially changed. Angeles, as a well-trained soldier, may cherish a dream of restoring order and the kind of law, in default of a better kind, which prevailed under the rule of Díaz, but we must see his reply to Díaz, and Mr. de la Barra's reply to Limantour, before we can make up our minds that he has joined a conspiracy with Díaz and his famous Secretary of the Treasury to restore the old order.

Porfirio Díaz is in his eighty-fifth year, and we doubt if he can ever be active again in political affairs. That there is a movement on foot to recapture Mexico for the conservatives we are well aware. Our objection to this movement is that it is entirely too obviously "on foot" in this country. Mexico is the place for it. It is only fair to say that there is not a particle of proof as yet that General Angeles is in sympathy with its projectors. Suspicions of his lack of sympathy with the revolutionists he associates with are based solely on his superior education and social standing. He is the Felipe Egalité of the Mexican revolution.

LAWS OF BUSINESS AND LAWS FOR BUSINESS.

It is an odd chance that brings before the public on the same day the testimony of ex-President Roosevelt and the address of Mr. Perkins about the application of the anti-trust law to the Steel Trust and the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company. The President of that time is proud of his suspension of the law, in such haste that he did not await even the opinion of his Attorney General, he testified. It was one of the most contentious acts of his Administration, praised and blamed about equally. Yet, as Mr. Perkins told the Southern Commercial Congress, "The South has not complained, "the North has not complained, cap-"ital has not complained, labor has "not complained, consumers have not "complained." The general effect of that specific act was to facilitate the settling of the panic of 1907, a good so great that much indulgence might be felt regarding the means by which it was reached. Yet President Roosevelt's successor, another Republican President, prosecuted the trust which Mr. Roosevelt had refused to prosecute and had befriended, in the belief that public opinion demanded it. Today the stock of that same trust is strong partly upon the expectation that the Supreme Court will find it a good trust, whose restraint of trade is reasonable and, therefore, lawful.

Mr. Perkins complains that men of business can make neither head nor tail of the law or the politics of the trust legislation. They cannot rely upon either lawyers, courts, or Presidents as guides to the propriety of their actions. He calls this "ridiculous, stupid," and esteems it one of the greatest obstacles to reviving prosperity. New undertakings will not be considered while conditions are so uncertain that business men are in danger of jail for acts they think morally proper and financially justified. Relief through the Clayton law is not to be expected, for in his opinion it ought to be called the "muddle law," merely another in the long list passed for the benefit of lawyers and politicians. There is force in this arraignment of the practice under the law, but it ought not to be extended to the principles of the law. These absurd things and more have occurred under the law, but since the original law has not been changed in a syllable it is obvious that it cannot be held responsible for such contradictory procedure. Judges, Presidents, and men of business are all responsible for the occurrences. The acts of none of them have been consistently of the same quality. The Sherman law itself is not one of those statutes which are a law for business. It embodies laws of business, laws required by business for business, according to the epitomized wisdom of a thousand years, against which the assaults of politicians pandering to the changing tempers of the times have beat in vain. The principles of an unaltered and unalterable statute cannot suffer from the shifting practice of administrators not acting according to the best inspiration of public interest.

It is true that there are uncertainties under the anti-trust law, just as there are uncertainties under jury trials. It is even more impossible to know what the verdict of a jury will be than to guess about the status of a trust under the anti-trust law, and yet one is as firmly a fixture in our business life as the other. Individuals hold their lives and property at the risk of a jury's condemnation, and so must the trusts. But the risk is no greater for the trusts than for common people. Conduct is a reasonable defense before a jury for either a trust or a man, and is defense enough. Business men have a grievance, but it is not against law, nor against juries' procedure under the law. What bad trust has escaped under the law? What good trust has suffered by the law? It is true that not a few good trusts have suffered under the law, but not by the law. What they suffered by was, in Mr. Perkins's words, "the passing fancy, opinion, "or political bias of this, that, or "the other man, representing what-"ever political party temporarily may "be in power." Mr. Perkins is right in saying that business cannot rest on that basis. The Supreme Court has learned that lesson and redeemed its first error in administering the politics rather than the substance of the law. Some bad trusts have learned it, and all bad trusts have taken notice. That is to say, men of business have learned the lesson of the law, and some needed the lesson. Best of all, as applying to the immediate future, are signs that the present Administration has learned the lesson against unreasonable prosecution of reasonable trusts.

In proof may be cited the address, singularly enough on the same day, of the Chairman of the Trade Commission. Addressing the Chicago Industrial Club, Chairman Davies discussed "cartels" in international trade. He found differences in form, but plainly said that they "fix prices, control output, divide territory," not only in intranational but in international trade. Political boundaries have no economic significance in trade, and the Chairman's conclusion was: "It would be a confession of "unfitness if this country should be "unable to meet conditions such as "these in international trade." The Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission cannot take that position in international trade and another in domestic trade. It will be a surprise if there are midnight proceedings against good trusts under the Clayton law.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Taking Much Trouble for Nothing.

German sympathizers out in Wisconsin have started a new movement, the effect of which, they hope and think, will be to stop the sale by American manufacturers of ammunition and other military supplies to the Allies.

Their scheme is not without ingenuity, for under that "discovery" statute of the State, a law which permits action analogous to what we call "supplementary proceedings," they have demanded that the Allis-Chalmers corporation make full and exact disclosure in court as to its making and sale of shrapnel and other wares which, as there is no demand for them in this country and the Germans cannot buy them, must be going to the opposing belligerents.

Possibly, and not improbably, some information of this sort may be thus secured. But what then? After it has been obtained there will remain to be performed the larger task of proving, to the satisfaction, not of the State, but of the Federal authorities, that such sales are in violation of the neutrality laws. These laws, as it happens, are not made in Madison, but in Washington, and they have been repeatedly and very clearly interpreted by those charged with their enforcement as permitting precisely the sort of traffic with which the Allis-Chalmers people are accused—and do not take the trouble to deny.

The ingenuity of these proceedings, therefore, is equaled by their futility, and while such measure of success as they may have would enable those bringing them to say "We told you so!" that will be all, and they can tell us so just as well now, since it is a matter of common knowledge that great quantities of ammunition are going from this country to England, France, and Russia. The regularly published statistics of exports contain much more information on the subject than can be dug out of the Allis-Chalmers books or those of any other one corporation.

Looking for Work in Old Age.

One of our correspondents contributed yesterday to the discussion of age in relation to employment the thought-provoking suggestion that the common reluctance to hire men and women advanced in years had its real explanation in [illegible] probability that if such persons [illegible] given, and were still competent and willing to give, [illegible] tory service, they would not now be seeking new positions.

This theory is not without a [illegible] plausibility, for it is true, as the writer of the letter said, that length of service, well performed, does much toward making tenure of place permanent, and often, perhaps usually, insures the faithful and efficient employe, even after efficiency has declined, against the hard necessity of seeking work from strangers. But while that is often true, it also often happens that the elderly or the old do have to undertake that task for reasons wholly unrelated to the quality of past services or to present competence.

Sometimes unavoidable changes of private status or fortune forces those to look for employment who never expected to need it. On the other hand, business failures or retirements may turn out into the streets those whose work has been and still is of high quality, and like effects are not infrequently produced by changes in business methods or industrial implements. Large groups of workers have more than once found the skill gained by years of experience made worthless by the introduction of a new machine the operation of which they are too old to learn.

These are the tragedies of trade, and they are so numerous as to make untrue as well as cruel the placing on elderly seekers for employment, as a class, a general condemnation as convicted by their predicament of being unworthy or unpromising applicants.

ART NOTES.

Porcelains, Potteries, and Miniatures on View—F. W. Kost's Paintings.

At the Anderson Galleries are two collections on exhibition prior to their sale by auction. One consists of Chinese porcelains and Persian potteries and miniatures. The latter include a number of interesting examples, one, a night scene, showing Joseph's flight from Jerusalem, the city in the background, and the wooded landscape having an impressionistic quality seldom found in these succinct little narratives of Persian origin. A few of the miniatures show Indian influence, many have gold backgrounds, and there are several entire books with decorated lacquer covers. The collection offers ample opportunity for expertise in a field not yet very thoroughly known.

The second collection consists of paintings by American and European artists, among them several excellent examples of the work of Carleton Wiggins, whose cows and sheep in quiet pastures increase in interest as the years pass over them. The day will come when these truthful competent animal portraits, containing so much of outdoor feeling and naturalness, will be valued by collectors of American art far beyond their present importance in the auction room.

Paintings by F. W. Kost.

At the Milch Galleries are fifty paintings by F. W. Kost, characteristically fresh and clear in tone, reflecting for the most part the atmospheric effects of our Long Island shores. The artist paints hay boats and sand boats, kelp gatherers and fishermen's huts with refreshing disregard of picturesqueness and close attention to his rendering of light filtering through salt, damp air. The exhibition will be open until May 8.

The designs submitted in the contest for the woman's suffrage campaign poster will be shown at the Society of Beaux Arts, 126 East Seventy-fifth Street, from May 6 to May 13.

Chinese Porcelains and Rugs.

At the American Art Galleries is a collection of Chinese porcelains, pottery, jades, agates, rugs and carpets belonging to Loo & Cie. of Paris which were brought over here to be sold at the outbreak of the war, but which were detained in customs until too late for an early season sale. The rugs include many very beautiful examples of that high aesthetic quality that makes the slow appreciation of the Chinese product in this kind so amazing. An unusual example has at one end bands of peach color and old gold completely crossing the rug, the customary field and borders starting below them. Another notable example has a border that seems to be made up of a succession of flying bats in pale turquoise on an apricot ground. In many of the rugs the combination of yellows, from tawny tigerish orange to palest straw color, with blues ranging from very dark to light sapphire, is accomplished with the certain tact of the Chinese weaver.

An interesting feature of the other sections of the collection is a group of rare cloisonne. The jades are for the most part carved in rather intricate designs, thus losing their special quality of beauty. Among the porcelains are several cases of blacks, purples, and clair-de-lunes of great distinction. The sale takes place May 5 and 6.

A Spade Is a Spade.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The only reason that there is any question at all about the meaning of the name "Chicago" is because Chicagoans are unwilling to accept the plain meaning of the word. Even the Encyclopaedia Britannica says, "An Indian name of uncertain meaning, but possibly from Ojibwa She-kag-oug, 'wild onion place.'"

As a matter of fact, "Chicago" is the Anglicized form of the Otchipwe (Ojibwa, Chippewa) word "Jikagoug"—j like French j, oug like French ou—meaning "place of the skunk."

"Jikagoug" is the locative form of "Jikag"—skunk. The word is thus defined by Bishop Baroga in his "Dictionary of the Otchipwe Language," Volume II., Page 171: "Jikag—polecat, (a stinking little beast.) From this word is derived the name of the City of Chicago." See also—F. Crysostom Venwyst—"Chippewa Exercises." Remarks on the Locative Case, Page 147.

The same grammatical forms are preserved in the Anglicized names of Winnebago, Minn.; Peshtigo, Wis.; Newago, Mich., and other towns in the region once inhabited by the Otchipwe tribes. The words "Jikag" and "Jikagoug" are of frequent occurrence in spoken Otchipwe today, and I have often heard them used. An old Indian, born about 1840, within the present limits of Chicago, once told me that there could be no possible doubt of the meaning of the name.

Kuno Meyer, Defendant.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Professor Meyer cannot be oblivious to the fact that in the forum of public opinion Germany is still on the defensive; that he who would support her cause can best do so only by shouldering the burden of proof of whatever statements he makes.

In the exordium of his letter to President Lowell the selection of the adjectives "vile and slanderous" imposes obligations on the author and raises expectations in the reader which are not fulfilled. We expect to find the words in the poem so characterized demonstrated to be false. Not so. The statement is followed by the quoting of a definition of neutrality; and the author forgets that neutrality does not enjoin the speaking of the truth; that obligations to show fairness and good-will are not broken by the enunciation of accepted verities. The part of the poem here attached treats not of unchecked rumors. The bodies of women and children [illegible] and forgotten [illegible] never be known but Rheims Cathedral stands sturdy and [illegible] proof of deeds that one side [illegible]

SATURNIA'S EXAMPLE.

Homer Thinks That a Lady Started the War Fog Practice.

New York, April 29, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The "entire civilized world" (if any portion yet remains "civilized") should be up in arms at reports of the latest iniquitous practices of one of the belligerents in the Great European Massacre—namely, the use of blinding and poisonous vapors to check the enemy's advance. That The Hague had explicitly forbidden such practices, and that the aforesaid belligerent was a signatory to this decree, seems to be but "child's play" as a deterring agent.

Then, what? Is there no means at hand, or to be devised, by the cunning chemist or the wise meteorologist, to meet this iniquity? And to meet it in a manner that shall be reasonably humane, (human, at least!)? It goes with the current account of this poison-gas practice that it is only effective with a favorable wind. In that case, can no scientist of splendid inspiration find a way of changing the wind over a limited space of earth? Again, there is suggestion in the (believed) fact that our old-fashioned Fourth of July free use of powder—firing of guns and cannon—was inevitably followed by a thunderstorm. Can no preventive measure be found in providing Donnerwetter as a counter to this infernal ingenuity, (issuing, presumably, from the god at Essen?) Why not a thunderstorm of vast proportions to meet the advancing hosts of the poison-gas blowers?

Those who remember reading "The Last of the Barons" will recall a mountebank person (whose name the writer forgets) who was able, by some thaumaturgy or other, to cause the gathering of an impenetrable fog between two confronting armies to the advantage of one and the defeat of the other. What Bulwer's imagination accomplished perhaps some practical Edison might yet rival! Or, who knows what new gas—what volatile, rapidly expanding, densely obscuring agent waits to be discovered by some untiring and acute laboratory worker? It is a matter worthy some consideration. Such an agent might prove vastly contributory in the solution of the "peace" problem with which our lady envoys at The Hague are now beginning to wrestle. There is precedent in the way in which a Homeric goddess saved her favorite Greek legion by turning the tables on the Trojans. The passage is in the Twenty-first Book of The Iliad, (Chapman's translation:)

> These now Achilles pour'd about
> The scattered field. To stay the flight Saturnia cast before
> Their hasty feet a standing fog; and then flight's violence bore
> The other half full on the flood.

But the "peace" which the envoy ladies dream of (the present writer, too,) could only be achieved by an equal distribution of the confounding element! And this would make no story for warlike Homer or for heroic Chapman. Thus—

> As Hera once, on silver Xanthus' banks,
> Breathed forth a fog to stay the storming ranks
> Of those that would destroy her Argive hosts—
> A fog that struck death chill to all their boasts;
> So, now, would I that earth and waters bred > on those old fields of dying and of dead
> A mist—a blinding mist, that none in arms
> Should find their way to further mutual harms—
> A "standing fog" that wrapped her all around,
> Till sad, mad Europe once again her reason found!

A Place for Generosity.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The American Clearing House has made several appeals for garments for the refugees and convalescent soldiers. The need is most urgent, and though Americans have been more than generously helping this Winter, the need during the coming months will be far greater. The Vacation War Relief Committee has since Sept. 1 sent garments to the value of over $80,000 for the refugees and hospitals in Europe. If some of your readers realized that we have now on hand thousands of garments for men, women, and children that have been made in our temporary work rooms by the women and girls who have been thrown out of work, wouldn't they, perhaps, be willing to give us an order? By doing so it would enable us to keep a large number of girls employed until they could find permanent positions and, at the same time, help the splendidly efficient relief work that is being done. No money received by the Vacation War Relief Committee leaves this country. Our work rooms are giving work to 400 girls daily, and our employment bureau is finding permanent positions for approximately 60 per cent. of the girls who apply.

We feel that one of the reasons for this large percentage of placements is that we are able, through the work rooms, to reach the girls so quickly, and also because the girl looking for work is not worn out by anxiety and lack of food because of the temporary "tide-over" wage we pay her.

Dispossessed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As the wife of a practicing physician in a nearby town, known to the inhabitants as a "poor" place, I have, during the fifteen years of our residence, heard of many cases of destitution, but one family is at present in great need of help. It consists of parents and six children who have been living all Winter in a cellar. As we can do nothing more than we have done, I am sending this appeal, hoping you will see fit to print it and that response will be made by your readers.

My husband has been the attending accoucheur seven times for the mother—the eldest child is under fourteen and the youngest a few days old. Although the woman is still in bed, (or ought to be,) she has been served with a notice of dispossession. The husband and father belongs to that class which cannot hold a job for any length of time. The mother is a heroine, worthy and true.

What I should like to do, if the readers of The Times will assist with small sums of money, is to get them out of that cellar into a decent place of abode, and to be able to guarantee the rent for a time. My plan would be to deposit the lump sum and only draw for them at times like the present or at my own discretion.

One may say: "There are many such cases." Yes, Mr. Editor, there are, alas, many such cases.

THE KIND OF PEACE THAT ENGLAND WANTS.

How British Thought Is Crystallizing on the Three Essential Terms of a Plan to Banish War From Europe.

By H. G. WELLS.

London, April 3, 1914.

In Great Britain at present there are as regards the ending of the war four schools of thought. There are the Liberals who want to be easy with Germany and the Liberals who want to be stern with Germany, there are the people who want to say "Hush!" to all discussion of why we are fighting and what we want, and there are the Tory vituperators. War has always involved severe nervous strain and this war has involved nervous strain to more people than any war has ever done. And so at either fringe of the extreme Liberal and extreme Tory position there are foaming states of mind bordering upon lunacy. But the anti-war lunatic has little or no outlet in the press; with his lengthy letters of indecent abuse, written almost invariably upon ruled paper in pencil, he is merely a minor trouble to the writer who chances to attract his attention; but the dementia at the Tory end has a publicity and counts—if only to our discredit. Its characteristic is indiscriminate abuse of the Government, of the enemy, of imaginary traitors and spies, of ordinary people and of everybody who discusses the war at a normal temperature. Now these accesses break out in The Daily Express, now in The Morning Post, now in Blackwood's Magazine.

And next to this school which has lost its mental balance altogether, but manifestly with some sort of thought to it, is the school of Hush! These are the people who do not want to have any discussion whatever of our national aims at the present time. "Let us," they say, "beat the Germans first." Or they allege all sorts of bad effects upon neutral powers and upon our allies, and so forth, as a probable consequence of a plain declaration of our intentions. They do not specify and it is a little difficult to specify what harm an honest declaration of purpose could do us anywhere in the world. They affect a charming modesty, and would leave all this business of settlement to the diplomatists—who were so clever before the war. So far as I can gather these people think we ought to be free to spring disagreeable surprises upon our allies and upon the world generally, when we have really got things into our hands.

Contrasted with these two small but noisy groups the main body of British people is set quite definitely upon an open, a universally understood, that is to say, a democratic peace—a victorous peace. It does not want things shabbily and secretly patched up; it does not want another diplomatic brew of the Berlin Treaty pattern; it wants the war fought generously to a generous settlement. In other words, the mass of British opinion is liberal, using the word in its proper and not in its party sense. And it is resolved, just as our allies are resolved, to fight this war out completely to a completely satisfactory finish. If that satisfactory finish cannot be got now we have to go on fighting until we can get it. For the life of me I cannot see why we should not state what peace we should consider satisfactory now. It is nonsense to talk of the mischief of a premature discussion of peace. There are certain ends that alone make this war worth fighting and which cannot be too emphatically stated. If we have to fight two or three years to get them, we shall go on doing so quite cheerfully; the mind of the country, apart from its hysterical extremists, is manifestly set quite calmly now upon that. The country is bored and strained and distressed beyond measure by the war, it hates the obsession of war, but that merely strengthens its present determination to go right through to such an end that nothing of the sort shall ever occur again. Britain has been strangely quickened by this war. If it does not lead to a democratic, secure peace, if our country finds itself at last in a new net of diplomacy, if after unstinted sacrifices there is a demand for further sacrifices, if the war is to lead to conscription, social exasperation, and a new set of European wars, then I venture to prophesy there will be a British revolution within a decade from the crime of such a peace.

Now the end we seek for this war is threefold and in general terms it can be stated without any serious cleavage among the mass of British people and without any serious difference with any of our allies. First of its triple headings there is the restoration and compensation of Belgium; secondly, there is the establishment of a general contentment in the world by a rational readjustment of boundaries, and thirdly, there is the chastening of Germany. That in general terms is what we are fighting for, and so stated I venture to think our aim will receive not only the support of the great body of allied but also of neutral opinion. It is when we begin to deal with these three things in detail that the discussion begins.

First, with regard to Belgium, there have been eloquent passages about her compensation to the "uttermost farthing." What in this case is the "uttermost farthing"? Expulsion of the Germans and an enormous indemnity—that much is generally conceded. But there is something more. Belgium has now ceased to be a neutralized country and she cannot contemplate her present frontier without dismay. To the southeast is undefended Luxemburg, like an open door; to the east of Liége is the Aix country, (and some of it is very Belgium country,) with strategic railways and everything complete for a fresh Prussian adventure. Is it not the plain common sense of the situation to extend Belgium eastward so far as a possibly sympathetic population extends, to bind her more closely to Luxemburg, and to insist upon the disarmament, the destruction of strategic railways and fortresses, and the separation from Prussia of the German country west of the Rhine? Separation from Prussia—not separation from Germany. The militarism of this country threatens both Belgium and Holland; it has been and it must not continue to be a nuisance to Europe. I submit that the extension of Belgium at least to Aix, Malmedy, and Montjoie and the neutralization of the eastern Rhine province is one of the primary ends of this war.

Then, next, it is just as well to get our heads clear upon the question of Alsace-Lorraine. A number of the more pacific liberals discuss this question as though we had no ally called France, or as if France had not been bearing the greater burden of this war. They talk of some amiable project by which these States are to vote themselves into France or Germany or autonomy. It is well to remember that this question of Alsace-Lorraine is primarily a question for France, that it lies very close to the heart of France, and that the British interest in it is a very theoretical and amateurish one. In the long run we shall have to recognize, and it will make things easier for all the world if we recognize soon, that France has to settle about Alsace-Lorraine herself and that our business as her ally is not to bother her with criticisms but to back her decision.

Then we have to define our purposes on the eastern frontier of Germany. We have the Czar's promise of a unified Poland under his crown; this is a project our public opinion has indorsed with enthusiasm, but it lies with Russia rather than with us to draw the boundaries of Poland. I suppose that the liberal position, to put it in general terms, is that Poland should include all the country that is inhabited chiefly by Poles. We have, however, extreme claims from Polish sources upon great areas of Eastern and Western Prussia and Breslau. These claims have little support in the present language and social habits of the people most concerned. Here and in the case of the Austrian Empire generally it is the business of every intelligent man, if indeed there is to be a democratic settlement of the war, to inform himself just as fully as he can of the boundaries and dispositions of the various language-culture groups of the patchwork of Eastern Europe and of the peculiar difficulties involved. Moreover, it is clearly part of the liberal intention to fight until Bohemia is free from the German and Greater Serbia reunited, and to welcome and assist any Danish attempt to recover Danish Schleswig. Albania, it is suggested, could best be made a cantonal republic on the Swiss model. There would be at least a strong undercurrent of British hostility to the partition of Albania by Italy, Greece, and Serbia. These countries can find their compensations in more legitimate expansion. The present destiny of Egypt is to be a protected State in the British imperial system like the great protected States of India, and it is equally clear that we shall no longer oppose the Russian access to Constantinople and the Mediterranean. Serbia and Italy will jointly bar Austria from the Adriatic. It will make for the contentment of the world if Rumania and Bulgaria are extended to include every district that is by language and culture theirs. And the end of this war must involve momentous decisions upon the fate of Syria, where there is a prevailing French interest, and Mesopotamia and Arabia, and upon the expansion of Greece or Asia.

But even the permanent settlement of all these vague rivalries that have retarded the development of the Near East for a century becomes insignificant in comparison with the problem of our subsequent relations with Germany. Here particularly it is that British liberalism splits. There is a section disposed, even in the event of the completest victory, to make generous appeals to Germany; there is a larger section too distrustful of the German spirit to tolerate any such experiments. Quite typical of the former is the Head Master of Eton with his extraordinary suggestion that in exchange for the neutralization of the Kiel Canal (which Germany could at any time recapture) Great Britain should neutralize Gibraltar (which she would certainly never be able to recover again). Others of the propitiatory liberal school would return Germany her lost colonies or even add to them, regardless of the natural anxieties of Australia and South Africa, and our allies. It is in relation to these questions that there is such an extraordinary consumption of German political books and books about Germany in Britain at the present time.

It is very remarkable and heartening indeed to note how the dispersed British intelligence has set itself to gauge the moral and intellectual quality of its antagonist. Since the first explosion of the war Britain has been patiently and thoughtfully feeling Germany's bumps. And as a result I do not think that Britain—quite apart from the fact that France will have a very definite say in the matter—means to leave any means of offense in the hands of Germany that she can take away. As an officer recently wrote from Flanders, "The Prussian is an ugly winner and a damned bad loser." That, after three-quarters of a year, is the ruling British persuasion. "The Hymn of Hate" and all the elaborate cultivation of evil-spiritness of which it is the flower may in the end prove more disastrous to Germany's world empire than the loss of a dozen battles. It may make England implacable. It will strengthen the resolve of the sterner liberalism of England and justify it before the world to give these people no chance of subsequent mischiefs.

A favorite phrase with the propitiatory liberals is that we must not "humiliate" Germany. But the more clearly we study the psychology of Germany the less alarming do the probable consequences of her humiliation appear. Germany seems to need humiliation. What has corrupted Germany is success; 1871 poisoned Germany and ennobled France. Germany, it seems to us, understands nothing but violence; she will mistake restraint for vacillation; the harder this war hits her, the more its disagreeable consequences impress her, the less likely is she to make another. Apparently it would "humiliate" Germany if we did anything to limit her navy and reduce those North Sea naval stations, which have no conceivable purpose in the world except to strike at England. For my own part—but here I write only for myself—I do not see why we should not annex the coast waters of Germany up to the high-water mark from Borkum as far as Röm and so end this nuisance in the North Sea forever. That would effectually bar the reappearance of the German Fleet without subjecting a single German to alien rule. It would be in the long run an enormous benefit to Germany as well as ourselves, saving them and us hundreds of millions of entirely unproductive armament expenditure. But it must be confessed that the general body of opinion in Great Britain is still quite formless upon this particular question of the future of the North Sea. It seems to be largely lost sight of in more comprehensive but perhaps more Utopian projects of a world conference and a world disarmament.

All this the American reader may say is dividing the skin before the beast is killed. But whenever one hunts a beast one has one's plans for its skin. At any rate the beast is now at bay. Its first rush has been stopped, and it is stunned and bleeding. The civilized Allies have done at least as well as the North in the first year of the civil war. If the beast still gets away or kills us that is our misfortune, that will defeat but it will not alter our present intention. Here, generally, are the aims of the British people in this war, and we shall not desist, we shall not be content, until these aims are very completely attained.

LIVELY SENIOR SHOW IS 'THE PAINT BOX'

A SCAPEGRACE ARTIST, HERO

The Dancing of Chorus "Girls" a Feature of Howard I. Young and Michael Halpern's Play.

THE PAINT BOX, a musical comedy in two acts, produced by the members of the senior class of the College of Arts and School of Applied Science of New York University in the auditorium at University Heights.

"The Paint Box," a musical comedy in two acts, by Howard Irving Young and Michael Halpern, was produced last night in the College Auditorium at University Heights. Both the author, Mr. Young, and the composer, Mr. Halpern, who also collaborated in producing "The Bagatelle," the play given by the seniors last year, were graduates of the class of 1914. The play was staged by the senior class, the majority of the cast being upper classmen. The presentation was the second musical comedy given in seven years as previous to last year's senior show a Faculty ban opposed the production of anything more difficult than a minstrel show, because of the time demanded for rehearsals and consequent conflict with studies.

There were ten musical numbers on this year's program and each was well received, especially "Rose," "Maid That's Made for Me," "The Sawdust Trail," and "Did You Forget."

The plot of the comedy revolves about one Carl Carter, the scapegrace and penniless artist nephew of Montezuma Carter, multi-millionaire and hater of all things artistic. Because of his uncle's hatred of artists, Carl cannot study painting at home, and so goes to Paris, where he is supposed to be studying medicine, but where, in reality, he is living and working in an artists' colony. On his return to New York, he meets Rose Thorne, daughter of his hotel keeper, and with her he falls desperately in love. All goes well until the millionaire uncle announces that he is coming on a visit to his nephew. His arrival catches Carl in a tight place, and the latter pretends that he is a doctor and talks of the large practice which he is rapidly building up, and of his bright prospects for the future. As a result, the uncle, who had intended to settle a large sum on his nephew, decides that the youth does not need it.

The uncle complicates matters by falling in love with Rose Thorne, whose father immediately agrees to the match. The uncle, however, falls ill and in a moment of panic takes some of his nephew's painting materials which he mistakes for medicine. The contents of the "Paint Box" make him still more ill, and, to make matters worse, he is robbed of all the money that he has with him. This makes Rose's father believe that the riches of Montezuma Carter are all a myth, and he breaks off the match with his daughter. In the meantime Carl receives a large prize for one of his paintings, the success makes the millionaire uncle get a sudden respect for painters, he forgives his nephew and the young couple are again reunited.

The play is greatly enlivened by the introduction of a bit of local color in the shape of the Hotel de Gink and its proprietor, "Jeff the Bum," as well as by the part of Swiftie, the "bellhop"; Markham Welle, a crook, and Quill, Carter's secretary.

One of the features was the dancing of twelve chorus girls and men. Garbed in diaphanous gowns, and with incipient beards well shaved but still somewhat visible beneath powder and rouge, the "girls" danced in a way that showed well-muscled legs under fine silk hosiery, and made the audience open its eyes and gasp in surprise.

After the show, the annual senior ball was held in the gymnasium, which had been specially decorated for the evening.

BLIND CHILDREN IN A PLAY.

Educational Dramatic League Gives Performances at the Berkeley.

Some forty-eight children trod the boards of the Berkeley Theatre for the songs and quips of "The Toy Shop," when that brief extravaganza was presented there last evening. And none of them could see the delighted audience on the other side of the footlights, for the performance was given by the Camp Fire Girls who make up the dramatic club of the Lighthouse for the Blind, that stands in East Fifty-ninth Street. The blind children gave their play blithely and nimbly, and along all Broadway last evening the rising of no professional curtain discovered half so brave and pathetic a stage picture.

"The Toy Shop," aptly enough, is all about a little company of dolls that are quickened into life at the wave of a good fairy's wand. The real quickening is not so easy as all that and this performance bore eloquent testimony to the patient labors of the workers at the Lighthouse and of Helen Ford, the director, who had this special endeavor in charge. Forty-eight was rather a large number to crowd onto the Berkeley stage, from the standpoint of artistic effect, to say nothing of comfort. But that many had been rehearsed, and when there arose the question of leaving some behind, it was realized that there were some decrees too heart-breaking ever to be issued.

The occasion was an exhibition of the work of the Educational Dramatic League, and as President of that flourishing organization, Mrs. August Belmont presided. The second play, also a showing of Miss Ford's work as director, was "The Post Office," by Rabindranath Tagore. It was gracefully and discreetly staged and played by the Garrick Players from Stanton House. "The Post Office" and two other plays will make up the league program there this evening.

Miss Amy Baker Gives a Recital.

Miss Amy Baker gave a recital yesterday afternoon in the music room at the Hotel Biltmore, assisted by Charles Norman Granville, baritone, and Bruno Huhn, at the piano. The program consisted of several war and patriotic selections, a cycle of songs by Mr. Huhn, and a group of folk songs arranged by Cecil Sharpe. Mrs. W. Naier Washington, Mrs. Isaac How, Mrs. Charles D. Lathrop, Miss Vera Cravath, Mrs. Carter Kerr, Mrs. Henry W. Payne, Mrs. Harry Bradhurst, Mrs. John C. Blodgett, Mrs. Peter Moeller, Miss Grace Cumnock, and Miss Beulah Brennan were among those who attended.

FROHMAN OFF FOR LONDON.

His Stay Abroad to be Shorter Than Usual—New Galaxy of Stars.

Charles Frohman will sail on the Lusitania for London today to look after his theatrical properties in the British capital. Mr. Frohman said yesterday that his stay abroad would not be as long as usual this year because he plans to launch his productions for next season well in advance of the usual date for the reopening of theatres. One of these early offerings will be a new combination of stars similar to that now appearing in "A Celebrated Case," to be known as the Star Comedy Combination. Then there will be two other special productions upon his return.

Mr. Frohman spent most of yesterday with Henry Arthur Jones, who has just returned from Bermuda, where he completed a new four-act comedy. The play, as yet unnamed, will be produced in October. "The Girl From Utah" will play a brief return engagement, beginning Aug. 3. Julia Sanderson, Donald Brian, and Joseph Cawthorn will remain in that piece till Christmas. Mr. Frohman arranged the tours of his other stars before leaving. The list is longer than ever, including Maude Adams, John Drew, Ethel Barrymore, Billie Burke, Blanche Bates, William Gillette, Otis Skinner, Elsie Ferguson, Mario Doro, and Ann Murdock.

Justus Miles Forman will sail with Mr. Frohman. He is planning a new comedy for Fall production. Mr. Forman is going to the war zone as a correspondent.

Farewell at Wallack's Tonight.

The last performance in historic Wallack's Theatre, the stage of which is to be razed immediately to make way for a skyscraper, will be given tonight when Granville Barker's company will present Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion" and France's "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife." Charles Burnham, manager of the theatre, who for many years was associated with the Wallack family, has arranged an interesting program to follow the plays. There will be speeches by Mr. Barker and Augustus Thomas, and Rose Coghlan, who appeared in the opening performance of "School for Scandal" in Wallack's, will read an epilogue, written by Oliver Herford.

Friars' Dinner to John Ringling.

The Friars are planning to make their dinner in honor of John Ringling, one of the brothers of circus fame, in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor tomorrow night one of the most brilliant of the series of dinners given by the club during the past Winter. A vaudeville entertainment will follow the speaking, and after that there will be dancing. The list of speakers includes Irvin Cobb, Raymond Hitchcock, George M. Cohan, De Wolf Hopper, Rennold Wolf, Alf T. Ringling, and Wilton Lackaye.

Madison Sq. Garden as Arctic Resort

When Madison Square Garden is odpened Saturday night, May 15, as a moving picture theatre, it will present the appearance of an arctic resort. The pictures will be shown on an enormous screen covering the Fourth Avenue end of the building. This will be supported by massive columns of real ice. Masses of ice will be banked in other parts of the auditorium, and blowers behind these will send the chilled air through the building. The arena will be filled with seats, increasing the capacity to 12,000.

Stephens-Thornall Wedding.

The wedding of Miss Alice V. Thornall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward V. Thornall of 209 West Seventy-eighth Street, and Roger Stephens of Plainfield, N. J., took place last evening at the home of the bride's parents. The Rev. Merle Smith officiated.

Mrs. W. Kenneth Pray was matron of honor for her sister, and the other attendants were Mrs. Louise Ryerson, Miss Julie Grandin, and the young Misses Marie Thornall and Edith Eddy, who were flower girls. Robert Stephens was best man, and the ushers included Kenneth Stephens, Russel Preston, and Frank Shandrew.

A large reception followed the wedding.

Traubmann Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Traubmann will celebrate their golden wedding on Sunday at 150 West Ninety-fifth Street. They have four children, Miss Sophia Traubmann, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Countess von Limburg-Sterum, Benno Traubmann of New York, and Lionel Traubmann, a merchant of Duluth, Minn.

Miss Dorothy Danforth Engaged.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Eugene Danforth of East Orange, N. J., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Dorothy Danforth, to Kenneth Lee Jewett of Skaneateles, N. Y. Miss Danforth's father is Vice President and General Manager of the Public Service Railway Company of New Jersey. No date has been set for the wedding.

Balfe-De Mott Engagement.

Thomas F. Balfe of Newburg, N. Y., announces the engagement of his daughter, Miss Helen Wentz Balfe, to Clayton Merle De Mott, Jr., of Waterbury, Conn. Miss Balfe is a graduate of the Bennett School at Millbrook, N. Y., and a granddaughter of the late James M. Wentz. Mr. De Mott is a senior at Yale University and a son of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton M. De Mott of Waterbury. Mr. Balfe is President of the Newburg Savings Bank, and brother of Harry Balfe, President of the Austin-Nichols Company of New York.

Washington Social Notes.

MINISTERS DEMAND PRESBYTERY INQUIRY

Charge That New York Body Has Trampled Church Laws Under Foot.

UNION SEMINARY BLAMED

Ordination of Students Called a Scandal—Fox Committee Wants the Assembly to Act.

A protest signed by the Rev. Dr. John Fox, the Rev. Simeon B. Dunn, the Rev. Dr. James G. Patterson, and the Rev. Charles N. Van Houten was sent to Presbyterian leaders throughout the country yesterday demanding that at the Presbyterian General Assembly, which meets in Rochester, N. Y., in three weeks, a committee be sent here to investigate the New York Presbytery. The pamphlet charges that the New York Presbytery is plainly violating Presbyterian regulations, that it is dominated by Union Theological Seminary, and that it flouts the plain orders of the supreme Presbyterian body. Dr. Fox is himself a veteran member of the Presbytery.

The signers complain that twenty-one students of Union Seminary have been admitted to the Presbyterian ministry through the New York Presbytery under more or less strong protests. They charge a compact between the Presbytery and the Seminary and ask:

"Is this Presbyterian government? Is it not an intolerable scandal? Has not the time come for the General Assembly to visit the New York Presbytery officially and inquire what is its practice in licensing and ordaining candidates for the ministry? Is the Bible to be still our rule of faith and the law of the Church, or are we to be dominated by an institution which has dethroned the Bible and put in its place the discordant guesses of fashionable rationalism?

The Bible Blue-Penciled.

"These burning questions are not new, but every year they become more serious. Every Spring a new class of Union students enters the ministry taught by their professors to blue-pencil the Bible and punctuate its most sacred passages with interrogation marks. We pray that God may move the forthcoming Assembly to send a committee of visitation, composed of sound, trustworthy men, who will knock at the door of the Presbytery of New York and in no uncertain tones ask: Why is it that the repeated injunctions and warnings of the Assembly have for years been trampled under foot in contempt?

Dissensions between the liberal and conservative elements in the New York Presbytery are of long standing. The present protest was provoked by the recent ordination of four Union students, Messrs. Fitt, Darr, Chamberlain, and Carter. In spite of objections, all four were received.

The Rev. Mr. Van Houten, one of the signers, is an assistant at the North Church, on Washington Heights, the pastor of which, the Rev. Dr. John R. Mackay, has signed a reply, together with the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin and Elder Gilbert Colgate, in which the charges are denounced as unjust.

The protest renews the charges that Union graduates coming up for licensure as ministers, refused to accept the Bible as rule of their faith, calling in question the Virgin Birth of Christ, doubting the miracles, although admitting that Christ might perform miracles did He choose to do so; and on critical grounds declining to accept the Resurrection of Christ. One of them, so the protestants say, refused to believe with Sunday in a devil and hell, and declared he thought nobody would be really lost.

Reply from Dr. Coffin.

The Rev. Dr. Coffin, heading the reply to the protest, says much about modern scholarship, and adds:

"Concerning the Virgin Birth, the Union graduates professed faith in the teaching of the evangelists of Christ's sinlessness and divine origin, but said that, while scholars were divided in their interpretations of this part of the narratives, they could not affirm the historic fact of the Virgin Birth with the same positiveness with which they affirmed the historicity of other events of the Gospels; they by no means denied the historic fact of the birth in question."

PRESBYTERIANS SHOW GAINS

New York Churches Cut Expenses $224,000 with 1,441 New Members.

New York Presbyterian churches gained 1,41 members last year, and yet cut down their expenses $224,000, according to the annual report prepared for the General Assembly.

To maintain Presbyterian churches in Manhattan and the Bronx took $648,000, against $872,000 the previous year. It usually costs $100,000 a year to keep the Fifth Avenue Church going, but last year it was done on $59,000. It took $51,000 to maintain the Brick Church, at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street, or about the usual sum. The Madison Avenue Church, at Seventy-third Street, cost $50,000, Dr. Parkhurst's $50,000, including east or west side chapels.

There are now 34,895 Presbyterians in the two boroughs. The largest gains last year were made in the new Fort Washington Church and in the Madison Avenue Church. There is one new church since last year, the American International, at Second Avenue and Fourteenth Street, made out of what used to be the Labor Temple.

People worshipping in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church failed to give as much by $35,000 last year as the year before, but they gave to home and foreign missions and charities $417,000 as against $403,000 the year before. Charities alone amounted to $297,000. Charities of the Brick Church were $30,000. The money required to maintain the 61 Presbyterian churches last year was $1,574,000, of which $926,000 went to benevolences.

ST. PATRICK'S CELEBRATES.

Centenary of Old Cathedral in Mott Street Being Observed.

Cardinal Farley, Archbishop Bonzano, Apostolic Delegate, and Bishop Northrup of South Carolina, will assist Mgr. Kearney, rector of Old St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Mott Street, tomorrow morning in observing the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the church, the first Roman Catholic Cathedral to be established in the United States. The centenary will last for several days and conclude with a dinner and reunion at the Palm Garden on May 10.

The church was built in 1809 on the burial plot of St. Peter's Church of Barclay Street. It became independent of St. Peter's in 1817. In 1866 the interior was destroyed by fire and the exterior so damaged that it was necessary to rebuild. After the opening of the new St. Patrick's Cathedral, at Fifth Avenue and Fiftieth Street, the old cathedral was turned back to a parish church. At present the church is large in membership and influential among the Italians of the neighborhood.

PRACTICE FOR FOX HUNTS.

White Sulphur Riders Are Putting Their Mounts Over Hurdles.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, West Va., April 30.—The members of the colony at White Sulphur who are enthusiastic riders have turned their attention to the fox and drag hunts that have been promised for an early date this month. The schooling of the new hunters and the hounds is nearly completed and the riders who anticipate remaining for the hunting season are now taking their favorite mounts to the meadows below the springs where they put their mounts over the stone walls and hurdles.

There was a party of six riding in the meadows today and schooling the horses. Among the party were Miss Margaret Lewis and Louis F. Swift of Chicago. Miss Grace Sigfried and Miss Edith Stair took lessons in hurdling to be prepared when the hunting begins.

A picnic in the woods on a bright moonlight night appealed to several of the younger members of the colony today and at sundown twelve young people left the Greenbrier in several carriages bound for the woods below Mountain Home on Howard's Creek. Mr. and Mrs. Julian Fairchild were the host and hostess. They cooked their supper by the bank of the stream and returned shortly before midnight.

Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Beale took today one of the longest and most difficult rides taken so far this season when they set out early in the morning for the summit of Greenbrier Mountain. They continued along the crest of the mountain and descended on the further side at the Greenbrier River and followed the stream to the Lewisburg Turnpike, and returned to the hotel during the afternoon. The ride was twenty-eight miles over forest paths.

The other riders and drivers today included Dr. and Mrs. J. Norman Henry, Mrs. Henry Sanderson, Mrs. Walter Davis, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. McKee, and Mr. and Mrs. A. L. McDaniel.

Among the registrations at the Greenbrier today were Mr. and Mrs. James L. Crowell, Mrs. L. L. Turck, and William F. Reilly of New York; Miss Adelaide Brown and Miss Helen Robinson of Paris, France; Mrs. M. F. Santry and Arthur J. Santry of Boston, and Mrs. John De Koven of Chicago.

BIG MAY DAY AT HOT SPRINGS.

Mrs. Evans to Give a Benefit at The Pillars for St. Luke's Church.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., April 30.—Mrs. Kelley Evans, at The Pillars, which she has under lease for the season, will give a big May Day celebration tomorrow afternoon on her grounds as a benefit for St. Luke's Episcopal Church of Hot Springs. The principal feature will be a dog show. William C. Denny of Washington has been getting the entries from the cottagers and visitors at the Homestead Hotel.

After a stay of several weeks here, Mrs. George Ingalls left in a private car tonight for Chicago, to join Mr. Ingalls, who departed Sunday night with Samuel Insull. Her young sons, M. F. Ingalls, 3d, and Howard Ingalls, accompanied her. The former has entirely recovered from a fall of four flights down a stair well he had Easter week when he sprained his arm and ankle.

Mrs. Rawson Wood, the tennis player, who sprained her ankle on the courts here a few weeks ago and was about the place in a wheel chair for a fortnight, has nearly recovered, though she still walks with a cane and slight limp. She tried dancing last night for the first time since the accident, at a gay little supper party given by Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell Iselin for their daughter, Miss Adrienne Iselin.

After trying over the full eighteen-hole course for three successive days, Miss Eleanor Chandler of Philadelphia this afternoon defeated George Singer of Pittsburgh and New York, winning two up. Robert and Alfred Batcheller played a twosome. Miss Helene Moffatt paired with George Branson, defeated Miss Margaret Erhart and Miss Jean Hinsdale in a two-ball foursome. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Lewisohn were among the other players.

R. F. Purdy gave a luncheon today at Oak Grove Farm, and tonight Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Carpenter gave a dinner party, with a dance afterward, at Fassifern.

Today's arrivals included Emil Roebling, T. Elliott Hodgkin, Mr. and Mrs. George Linders of New York; Mrs. John C. Grant of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Bowe of Hackensack, and Frank Gayley of Merion, Penn.

Daughter in Dr. I. C. Rubin's Home.

Dr. and Mrs. I. Clinton Rubin of 515 Central Park West are being congratulated upon the birth of a daughter. Mrs. Rubin, who was Miss Sylvia Unterberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Unterberg, was married to Dr. Rubin in January, 1914.

CONDEMNED SLAYER A MURDER WITNESS

Wm. Flack Will Be Brought from Death House to Testify Against Leggio.

LAW PASSED TO COVER CASE

He Will Be First Convicted Murderer in This State to be Summoned to Stand.

From his cell in the death house at Sing Sing, William Flack, who was sentenced to die for the murder of Guiseppi Marino, will come here on Monday under a writ of habeas corpus to testify against Angelo Leggio, who is also charged with the murder of Marino. Justice Ingraham in the Appellate Division granted the writ yesterday.

Flack's appearance as a witness in the Leggio case will be the first ever given in this State by a man condemned to death. It is made possible by a special law which was passed by the Legislature in its closing hours. The law was drafted to cover the Flack case especially after conferences between Governor Whitman and representatives of the District Attorney's office.

Following the killing of Marino in a furnished room at 634 East Thirteenth Street o nthe night of April 19, 1914, Flack surrendered to the police and later confessed that he committed the crime. He was committed to the Tombs, to await trial. A few weeks later a young girl named Louisa Macaluso appeared at the District Attorney's office and said that she and not Flack, had murdered Marino. She said that she shot him because he forced her to lead an immoral life, and that later she became frightened and dressed in boy's clothes and hid.

The girl was sent to the Tombs, but Flack was still held, and Assistant District Attorney Allen G. Wellman was assigned to investigate the case. After man yconferences with Mr. Wellman, the girl finally broke down and told a story which resulted in the indictment and arrest of Angelo Leggio for the killing.

Leggio, the girl said, had been jealous of Marino because of his attentions to her. He hired Flack to kill Marino, she said. After Flack's arrest, she told Mr. Wellman, Leggio advised her to hide and then told her to give herself up, say that she killed Marino because he tried to force her to lead an immoral life and then she would be allowed to go free.

When Flack was placed on trial he denied that the girl's story was true, but largely on her testimony he was convicted and sentenced to death. He was sent to Sing Sing on March 15, and soon afterward sent word to Father Cashin, the prison chaplain, that he would like to see him. As a result of several interviews with the chaplain Mr. Wellman went to the prison and heard from Flack a story which caused him to make an effort to get Flack's testimony before the jury whihc will try Leggio.

Flack, it is said, has admitted that the girl told the truth and that his part in the shooting was merely that of a hired gunman. Leggio's trial will begin next week before Judge Nott in General Sessions. When Flack arrives here on Monday he will be sent to the Tombs to await the beginning of the trial.

Flack's testimony against Leggio will not help him to escape the daeth penalty, unless the Governor commutes his sentence or pardons him. In case the Court of Appeals grants him a new trial on his appeal from the conviction the District Attorney may consent to allow him to plead guilty to a lesser degree of homicide.

SIDNEY WEBSTER MEMORIAL

Widow Is Building a Beautiful Chapel in St. John's Church, Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., April 30.—Mrs. Sidney Webster is having built a memorial chapel, to be called the Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament, erected in St. John's Church, in memory of her husband, the late Sidney Webster, which may be dedicated by Bishop James De Wolf Perry of Rhode Island next month. Gothic carved English oak is being used in the construction of the altar, and there will be eight famous paintings on this wood. In the centre of the altar will be shown the painting representing the communion of saints, painted by Sisters of the Community of St. Mary at Peekskill, N. Y.

Among the altar gifts from Mrs. Webster are candlesticks and tabernacle ornaments of gilt bronze with enameled plaques. In front of the altar and upon the floor is a bronze plate reading: "To the glory of God and in devout supplication for the soul of Sidney Webster, by Mrs. Webster."

Back of the altar is a large chest for the keeping of altar furnishings made of heavy oak, carved and ornamented in English style.

R. A. Cram of New York designed the chapel. The altar ornaments were designed by Durr Friedley, active curator of decorative arts at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

EDWARD D. EASTON DEAD.

Founder of Columbia Graphophone Co. Began Life as a Reporter.

Edward D. Easton, founder and President of the Columbia Graphophone Company and a pioneer in the talking machine business, died yesterday at a sanitarium in Central Valley, N. Y., in his sixtieth year. He was born in Gloucester, Mass., and removed with his parents to Arcola, N. J., early in life, and had made his home there ever since. Mr. Easton began life as a newspaper reporter on a Hackensack weekly paper, and then mastered stenography, becoming one of the most expert stenographers in the country before he was 30. Later he became a reporter on a Washington newspaper and covered the trial of Guiteau, the murderer of President Garfield, and also the famous Star Route trials, in which high officials were involved in Post Office graft cases. For his work in these cases as court reporter he received $50,000, said to have been the largest fee ever paid for such services.

Mr. Easton started at this time to organize a company to abolish stenography through the sale and use of the graphophone. He organized the Columbia Graphophone Company, after consolidating with the American Graphophone Company. In 1897 he came to this city and opened offices here and all over the country and Europe. Mr. Easton had other business interests, being President of the Burt Company, the Water Power Securities Company, the Volta Graphophone Company, and the Eaglesmere Company, and Vice President of the Hackensack Trust Company and the Hackensack Hospital Association. He was a member of the Arcola Country, the Hackensack Golf, the Oritani Field, the New Jersey Automobile, and the Motor Clubs. Mr. Easton was twice married. His first wife was Miss Hattie Kaldenbach and his second Miss Helen Mortimer Jeffries, whom he married in Washington in 1883. One son and four daughters survive him.

DR. WYCKOFF DIES IN INDIA.

A Missionary of Dutch Reformed Church for More Than 40 Years.

The Rev. Dr. John Henry Wyckoff, President of the Theological Seminary of Vellore, India, and a missionary of the Dutch Reformed Church in that country for more than forty years, died on Thursday at Kodai-Kanal, India. He was born at Baysfield, N. J., in 1851, and was graduated from Rutgers College in 1871. Three years later he was graduated from the New Brunswick Theological Seminary and went to India as a missionary of the Dutch Reformed Church.

Dr. Wyckoff returned to this country in 1886 and became pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church at Claverack, N. Y., where he remained until 1892, when he returned to India. He was one of the best known missionaries in that country and President of the Board of Trustees of the United Theological Seminary at Bangalore. Dr. Wyckoff was twice married. His first wife, whom he married in 1876, was Miss Emmeline Bonney, who died in 1886. His second wife, who survives him, was a Miss Chandler. Besides his widow, four children survive him, one of whom is Dr. John Henry Wyckoff of this city, and another is Miss Charlotte Wyckoff, a member of the senior class at Wellesley.

Among his literary work Dr. Wyckoff prepared a "History of the Wyckoff Family," and last year attended the reunion of that family, which was held in New Jersey, and of which he was historian.

Marriage and death notices intended for insertion in The New York Times may be telephoned to 1000 Bryant.

A BASEBALL RULE BARS KAUFF FROM GIANTS—DODGERS WIN—GOLF

GIANTS LOSE FIGHT TO KEEP KAUFF

National League Decides the Brookfed Deserter is Barred by Commission Rule.

NOT TO BE REINSTATED

President Hempstead Does Not Want Player if He Has Contract with Federal League Club.

The Giants continued their losing streak in the game of battledore and shuttlecock with the Brooklyn Feds over the services of Benny Kauff and finished a second best. Benny will very shortly be holding down his centre field berth at Washington Park. Judging from the discussion which has taken place over the case, the only things which seem to prevent Benny playing with the Giants are the Constitution of the United States, the traffic rules and regulations, and Hoyle.

President Tener yesterday held an impromptu meeting in his office with several National League club owners. President Hempstead of the Giants, Barney Dreyfuss of Pittsburgh, James E. Gaffney of the Braves, Charles H. Ebbets of Brooklyn, and President William F. Baker of the Phillies chatted and smoked cigars with Mr. Tener.

It was decided at the meeting that the iron-clad laws of the National Commission automatically operate against the engagement of Kauff with the Giants. As an "outlaw" he may apply for reinstatement, but he cannot be taken back in the fold until three years after his offense of jumping to the Federals was committed. He jumped a year ago, so he cannot be restored to good standing for two years more.

The rule which covers this point is No. 20, and is as follows:

A player who fails to report to or deserts the club having title to his services shall be declared and promulgated to be disqualified as a National Agreement player until restored to good standing on his application by the commission, if a major league player, or by the National Board if a minor league player. In all cases of failure to report or desertion the offender may be reinstated, with or without a fine, in the discretion of the tribunal having jurisdiction, provided, however, that if the player shall have joined an outlaw team his application for the removal of his disability shall not be acted on within three years after the commission of the offense.

President Tener also yesterday set aside the decision of Umpire Elmer Quigley in forfeiting the game Thursday to the Giants, so the game will go on record as it was played, a victory for Boston by the score of 13 to 8.

That ought to be cheerful news for the many who have Boston in the baseball pools this week.

Both President Tener and President Hempstead answered Robert B. Ward's telegram yesterday in relation to Kauff. President Tener stated that Kauff would not be permitted to play in the National League at this time. President Hempstead assured Mr. Ward that Kauff had been signed with the Giants with the understanding that he was not under contract with the Brooklyn Feds. He also stated that if Kauff was under contract with the Brookfeds, the Giants would not think of retaining him from his regular job.

It is understood that the officials of the Giants and the Brooklyn Feds had a conference yesterday and came to a perfect understanding in the case. If Mr. Ward will produce Kauff's contract, the New York club will assume that they have been misinformed in the case and that will probably be the end of it.

Yesterday was the first pay day of the season for the Brookfeds and Business Manager Dick Carroll visited Kauff at his hotel, where the little infielder is ill with a slight attack of ptomaine poisoning. When he offered to pay Kauff $162, the balance of his pay for this month, the player refused to take it. He has already drawn a good part of this month's stipend, however. Kauff has also taken some advance money from the Giants, it is understood.

Kauff admitted yesterday that he had signed a contract which Carrol offered him, but he did not think it was valid because President Ward had refused to approve the terms of the document. Business Manager Carroll told Kauff that he was wrong in this assumption, because yesterday was the first payday of the season and Brooklyn was willing to pay him according to the terms of the contract.

It is understood that the Brookfeds are paying Kauff $6,000 a year which is $2,000 more than he received in Indianapolis.

Kauff had a long talk with Carroll and showed plainly that he was a penitent young man. He is anxious to be forgiven and let by-gones be by-gones, which is probably precisely what will happen.

NEWARK, N. J., April 30.—That John J. McGraw, the Giants' manager, made Benny Kauff an offer of $30,000, or $10,000 a year for three years, just to sit on the bench of the New York Club, was the statement made here today by Bill Rariden, catcher of the Newark Federal League Club, and a close friend of Kauff when both were members of the Indianapolis Club of the Federal League last season. Rariden says that Kauff told him of the offer while the team was in training at Valdosta, Ga. Kauff, according to the Rariden, said that organized baseball men had devised this scheme of depriving the Feds of one of their best drawing cards.

Steve Harter, Secretary of the Newfeds, who acted in a similar capacity for the Indianapolis Feds last season, stated today that Kauff had tried to find a loophole in his Indianapolis contract last fall and had consulted a number of Indianapolis lawyers on the question. Harter said that Kauff signed a contract for three years in August, 1914, in Kansas City, where the Indianapolis Club happened to be playing at the time.

BAKER WILLING TO JUMP.

Takes Kauff Case as Cue and Is Now in Receptive Mood.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., April 30.—Rumor has it that J. Franklin Baker, famous home run hitter of the Athletics, will jump to the Federal League if the National Commission upholds the New York National League club for signing Benny Kauff, the Brooklyn Federal League club's sensational outfielder.

Baker admitted that he would listen to any proposition that sounded like real money, and that he did not think that he owed anthing to the Athletics if Manager Mack had really said that he did not want him. Baker says that these statements did not sound like Connie and that he personally had heard things from him since the opening day of the American League season in this city.

Baker has a broken rib and will not be able to play with Upland tomorrow, but says that he will be back in the game in another week. He has received no offer from the Federal League since the Kauff incident in New York. Frank was evasive in his answers and evidently has talked with Federal League agents more than he cares to admit.

"I don't know anything about the Federal League affairs," said Baker, but when nailed to facts he admitted that he was interested and would listen to any offer. "I have a contract with the Athletics, but if they don't want me, and it is possible to get away, I will listen to anything that sounds like money." I can hardly believe that Connie made some of the remarks credited to him, but if he did I don't see how he can hold me. The Federal League has made no offer to me recently. Perhaps they will be down here after me if Kauff is allowed to break his contract with New York, but I will not go out of my way for any offer. If they make me an offer and I am protected, I cannot saf that I will turn it down. In fact, as I said mefore, I will listen to any proposition, but wont say what my answer will be."

Federal League to Meet Here.

The Federal League will hold a meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria today. It was called by President James A. Gilmore on account of the rumpus which has been kicked up about Benny Kauff jumping to the Giants. By the time the Feds arrive today the matter probably will be all adjusted to the satisfaction of everybody concerned.

Tiger Freshmen Blank Cornell.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 30.—Princeton's freshmen baseball team won from the Cornell Freshmen this afternoon, by a score of 5 to 0. The Ithicans were unable to hit Thompson safely often, and the Tiger team gave him excellent support. Thompson limited his opponents to three hits, two of which were of the scratch variety. Benedict, who pitched for the Cornell Freshmen, was not effective with men on the bases, and had uncertain support in the field. Rankin and Hammond batted hard for the winers. Hammond's timely triple coming opportunely. The scor eby innings:

Cornell	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	—	0	3	4

Batteries—Thompson and Gordon; Benedict and Clark.

Virginia Beats Brown in Rain.

PRIVIDENCE, April 30.—Playing in drizzling rain, the University of Virginia defeated Brown today, 5 to 4. Errors were responsible for most of the runs. The score:

											R.	H.	E.
Virginia	1	0	2	2	0	0	0	0	0	—	5	6	5
Brown	0	0	0	0	0	1	3	0	0	—	4	5	5

Hardwick Harvard Nine's Captain.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 30.—Huntington R. Hardwick of Milton, football and baseball star, was elected Captain of the Harvard baseball team today. The election at this time was made necessary by the resignation of Russell R. Ayres of Montclair, N. J., because of illness. Hardwick is playing in the outfield of the 'Varsity nine for the third year.

Wisconsin Wins at Start.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., April 30.—Wisconsin bunched hits in the first inning, and defeated Indiana 4 to 2 in a Western Conference game today. All of Indiana's hits—two singles and a triple—were made in the fourth inning, when the local team scored its runs. Score:

Cubs Weed Out Youngsters.

CHICAGO, April 30.—Pitcher Schorr, purchased by the Chicago Nationals from South Bend last year, was released today under optional agreement to Fort Wayne, in the Central League. Pitchers Buckels and Robins, who were released before the season opened to Memphis and Kansas City, respectively, were turned back to the Chicago Club. The former was placed at once with the Troy (N. Y.) Club and the latter with Fort Wayne.

Last Cut in White Sox Squad.

CHICAGO, April 30.—The Chicago Americans cut their roster down to the legal limit tonight by releasing Howard Baker, utility infielder, to Little Rock, in the Southern League, and William Lathrop, the Notre Dame pitcher, to Kansas City, in the American Association.

JACK COOMBS COMES BACK AGAINST PHILS

Athletics' Old Star Pitcher Unsteady at Times, but Luck Favors Him.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 30.—Masterly pitching by Jack Coombs, the former "iron man" and world's series hero of the Athletics, backed up by faultless support "in the pinches," helped along oh what is generally known as the "breaks of the game," enabled Brooklyn to beat the Phillies today by a score of 2 to 1. It was the fourth and final game of the series between these teams, and Brooklyn is the first team to get as good as an even break in a series with the Phillies.

It is no discredit to Coombs or the calibre of pitching he served up to Moran's men to say that the Dodgers were favored with the luck of the game. Brooklyn batted Eppa Rixey much harder than Coombs was hit by the Phillies, but was unable to score a run until the fifth, when a two-bagger by Daubert, Stengel's sacrifice, and the scratchiest kind of an infleld single gave them a run. In the sixth Becker raced to the seats for Schultz's fly and then muffed the ball. The batsman took two bases on the error and scored on McCarty's single.

Two passes and an error filled the bases for Brooklyn in the first, but they failed to score, and some clever work by Bancroft and Killifer disposed of the visitors in the second. A double and single were wasted in the third. In the last three innings only two men reached first, Stengel on the double with two out in the seventh and O'Mara on a single after McCarty and Coombs had fanned in the ninth.

Coombs pitched a steady, careful game all the way. At times he was a bit wild and frequently pitched the limit of balls and strikes to the Phillies' batsmen, but whenever he was in danger something came to his aid and pulled him through. The score:

YANKEES' GAME OFF EARLY.

Thunderstorm Necessitates Postponing Contest with Boston.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 30.—Heavy thunder storms necessitated the calling off of today's game between the Red Sox and the Yankees, Manager Donovan being notified before noon and in time to catch an early afternoon train for New York. Thus the Yankees will be able to get in a good night's regular sleep before taking on the Mackmen at the Polo Grounds tomorrow. Capt. Huston, who accompanied the club here, was delighted with the Yankees' showing against the Red Sox, and expects the team will be able to duplicate its showing against the champions, from whom the Yankees recently took three of four games at Shibe Park.

The Yankees, safely perched in second place in the American League race, arrived home from Boston last night, their game there being prevented by the bad weather. The Yanks will tackle the Athletics at the Polo Grounds this afternoon. The Yankee management has decided to start all Saturday games at 3 o'clock.

DETROIT GETS THREE HITS.

Eddie Collins Makes a Sensational Play and Traps Cobb Off Third.

CHICAGO, April 30.—Urban Faber held Detroit to three scattered hits today while his teammates bunched their hits off Rubuc, and Chicago won a pitchers' battle, 4 to 1. Detroits' lone run was a gift. Cobb drew a base on balls, went to third on a wild pitch and scored on a sacrifice fly. The visitors threatened to score in the sixth inning, but Cobb, who had reached third base, was trapped by a sensational play started by Eddie Collins and was nipped a few feet off third base, following Crawford's single. This play was the feature of the game. Score:

Senators Take Third Game and Series.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Washington made it three out of four games from Philadelphia today by batting Wyckoff hard in three innings, winning 6 to 1. A double and single in the ninth gave the visitors their only run. Boehling was in good form, and only two Philadelphia players reached third base. The score:

FENCING TITLES FIND NEW OWNERS

Lieut. Dickinson, MacLoughlin, and Hall Win Championships at Hotel Astor Ballroom.

The names of three new champions were inscribed on the roll of honor of the Amateur Fencers' League of America last night at the grand ball of the Astor Hotel. The new title holders are: Foils, Lieutenant Oliver A. Dickinson, Officers' Fencers' Club, West Point; duelling swods, J. A. McLoughlin, Fencers' Club, and sabres, Sherman Hall, New York A. C. The announcement of a dance to follow the fencing brought out the biggest crowd that has ever attended a championship. The majority of the present showed little interest in the events, displaying a marked uneasiness over the long drawn out bouts.

On a raised platform running from one end to the other and down the centre of the ballroom the competitors for national fencing hnors performed for nearly four hours, and only when the sabres therw off sparks as the foilsmen slashed at each other in desperate efforts to score points.

With last year's champions failing to defend their titles the results of the contests establishes three new title holders. Lieutenant W. F. Van Blyenburgh, last year's sabre champion, is now at the front in Holland. Dr. Scott D. Breckenridge, Washington Fencers Club, the foils title holder, and Dr. F. W. Allen, Boston Athletic Association, champion with dueling swords, were unable to compete. The finalists with the three weapons were:

Foils.—Lieutenant Oliver A. Dickinson, Officers' Fencing Club, West Point; J. A. MacLoughlin, Washington Fencers Club, Washington, D. C.; Sherman Hall, New York Athletic Club, and A. E. Sauer, Illinois Athletic Club.

Duelling Swords.—J. A. MacLoughlin, Washington Fencers Club, Washington, D. C.; H. G. Geilen, Chicago Turngemeinde, Chicago; E. B. Myers, Fencers Club of New York, and Steddeford Pitt, Fencers Club of New York.

Sabres.—Steddeford Pitt, Fencers Club of New York; Sherman Hall, New York Athletic Club; J. B. B. Parker, Fencers Club of Philadelphia, and A. S. Lyon, Fencers Club of New York.

Lively competition marked the final rounds for the foils championship. Three of the four contestants won the same number of bouts, and it was necessary to decide the contest from the number of points scored. Lieutenant Dickinson made a total of 14 touches and had 9 points scored against him. MacLoughlin's total was 11 and 11, while Hall was a close third with 13 to 11. The army officer showed excellent form and held his opponents safe until he faced MacLoughlin, who broke through his defense and, scoring two points in succession, marred Dickinson's otherwise clean record. MacLoughlin, in turn, succumbed to Hall after a steady progress, which at one time promised to land him the title. The Mercury Foot foilsman displayed plenty of strength but was somewhat lacking in science.

MacLoughlin, the Washington sword expert, was the only contestant in the dueling sword championship to have a clean chain of victories. He defeated in succession Geilen, Myers, and Pitt, scoring his points without his opponents making any headway against him. Geilen and Myers ended the round with an even score, and in the fence-off for the tie Myers won.

The sabres competition was a long-drawn-out affair, but ended in favor of Sherman Hall, New York A. C., the Olympic champion, who was close pushed in each of his bouts, although he managed to win them all. The final bout of the evening gave second place to Sheddiford Pitt, New York A. C. The summary:

Championship dFoils.—Dickinson defeated Sauer, 5 to 1; defeated Hall, 5 to 3; lost to MacLoughlin, 4 to 5; MacLoughlin defeated Dickinson, 5 to 4; defeated Sauer, 5 to 2; lost to Hall, 4 to 5; Hall defeated MacLoughlin, 5 to 4; defeated Sauer, 5 to 2; lost to Dickinson, 3 to 5. Dickinson won 2, lost 1; MacLoughlin won 2, lost 1; Hall won 2, lost 1; Sauer won 0, lost 3.

Championship, Dueling Swords.—J. A. MacLoughlin defeated Geilen, defeated Myers, defeated Pitt; Geilen defeated Pitt, lost to MacLoughlin, lost to Myers; Myers defeated Pitt, lost to MacLoughlin, lost to Geilen; Pitt lost to MacLoughlin, lost to Geilen, lost to Myers. MacLoughlin won 3, lost 0; Geilen won 1, lost 2; Myers won 1, lost 2; Pitt won 0, lost 3.

Sabres.—Hall defeated Pitt, defeated Parker, defeated Lyon; Pitt defeated Parker, defeated Lyon, lost to Hall; Lyon defeated Parker, lost to Hall, lost to Pitt; Parker lost to Pitt, lost to Hall, lost to Lyon. Hall won 3, lost 0; Pitt won 2, lost 1; Lyon won 1, lost 2; Parker won 0, lost 3.

Local Boxing Bouts Tonight.

Matchmaker Tom McArdle of the Fairmont A. C. has arranged an attractive card of three ten-round bouts for tonight. The main event will see Tommy Buck of Philadelphia in action against Jimmy Powers. Tex Kelly will engage Martin Reilly, and Willie Jackson and Harry Nelson are booked for the third contest.

Two ten-round bouts will be staged at the Irving A. C. tonight. In the first Johnny Wilson of Harlem will take on Mike Masie of Staten Island, while the wind-up will introduce Terry Kellar of Cincinnati and George Ashe of Philadelphia.

Kid Graves of Milwaukee and Frankie Notter will be the headliners tonight at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn. Terry Mitchell and Jimmy Capper will clash in the second bout, while the third will find Silent Martin and Sailor Maher as the opposing forces.

The card for the Sharkey A. C. tonight will include two ten-round bouts of more than usual interest. Frankie Daly of Staten Island is matched with Young Britton of the West Side, and K. O. McNeill will hook up in the second contest.

Reich and Coffey Ready.

"Al" Reich and "Jim" Coffey, the two heavyweights who will box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night, have put the finishing touches to their training and tomorrow, at the rival camps, the principals in the coming encounter will box a number of exhibition rounds so that their friends may see that they are fit. The Reich headquarters are at Dal Hawkins's roadhouse, while Coffey is at the New Polo Club in Harlem. This will be the last boxing that the men will do until they enter the ring for Wednesday night's encounter. Reich is scheduled to box fifteen rounds tomorrow, Colin Bell, "Dave" Mills and "Jack" Hemple each being taken on for a five round session. Hemple was one of those who helped condition Jess Willard for his fight with Johnson. Coffey will box ten rounds, to be divided between "Al" Kubiak, "Joe" Jeannette and "Jack" Connors. Sixteen ounce gloves will be used in the sparring exhibitions so that no serious injury will be done.

HORSE RACING FOR CHARITY.

The opening day of the Metropolitan racing season, Thursday, May 20, will carry a special significance, as the Westchester Racing Association has voted to donate a portion of its receipts for the relief of suffering in Europe to the Lafayette Fund, the Committee of Mercy, and Blue Cross Association for the care of wounded horses. The Westchester Racing Association has also donated all of the clubhouse boxes, these subscribers who had already taken their boxes for the season having surrendered them for May 20, to be disposed of for the relief funds. Already practically all have retaken their boxes from the Relief Fund Committee at $50 for the day. The entire proceeds from the sale will go to the above-mentioned charities, which will further receive 25 cents from the sale of each admission ticket, 50 cents from the sale of each grandstand ticket, $1 from the sale of each clubhouse ticket, and 50 cents from the sale of each lady's ticket, and a proportion of the entire sale of the programs for the day.

The Blue Cross Association, of which Lord Londsale is President, seemed to the Westchester Racing Association an especially appropriate charity for racing associations and sportsmen, as it is organized for the relief of horses used in the European war, and corresponds somewhat to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Anmals in this country.

CHESS MASTERS IN DRAW.

Capablanca and Marshall Again Unable to Decide Deadlock.

José R. Capablanca of Havana and F. J. Marshall, the United States chess champion, met for the second time yesterday at the Hotel Grenoble in the ninth round of the chess masters' tournament. As was the case in the second round, when the first game between the rival experts was played, the result was a draw.

Capablanca did his best to complicate matters by sacrificing a pawn for the sake of doubling Marshall's king's bishop's pawn and laying open the latter's position in front of his king. It required careful play on the part of the American, and he finally chose a line of play in which the Cuban regained his pawn. After thirty-one moves a truce was declared. Marshall opened with the queen's gambit declined. The relative standing of the two leaders remains unsettled, inasmuch as Capablanca has an adjourned game to finish with Kupchik. This will be played off at the Hotel Grenoble today, together with the Lasker-Kupchik and Kupchik-Hodges games.

The game between Michelson and Bernstein in yesterday's round, opened by the former with an Evans gambit and declined by Bernstein, was drawn after thirty-six moves. Kupchik and Hodges adjourned a queen's gambit declined after fifty-one moves, Kupchik having a queen for a rook and pawn. Lasker outplayed Chajes in a Ruy Lopez and had the superior position when play was adjourned after fifty moves.

Three Events at Columbia Today.

Three Columbia teams will be seen in action on Morningside Heights this afternoon. Wesleyan will be the opponent of the Blue and White in track and baseball on South Field, and Williams in tennis on the East Field courts. One admission will suffice for the triple bill, the track meet coming first at 2 o'clock, followed by the baseball game. Columbia has not met Wesleyan on the track and field in a score of years, though both compete annually in the intercollegiates. It will be the first dual meet of the season for both colleges, so little line can be obtained on the strength of the visitors. Coach Bernie Wefers is confident that the Columbians will win, as all his stars are in fine condition. Heavy point winners for the Morningsiders will be Russell Beatty and Duke Olmstead in the weight events, Captain Brady in the hurdles, Harvitt in the century dash, Graham in the broad jump, and Loescher in the high jump. The last named has been jumping six feet in practice all week, and may set a new Columbia record for the event.

On the diamond the Blue and White looks to be equally successful. The team seems to have recovered from the slump experienced in the Harvard and Yale contests, playing wonderful ball against the Quakers Wednesday at Philadelphia, winning by a shut-out. Beck, Coakley's crack southpaw, is slated to start in the box for the locals.

Roosevelt League Boys to Compete.

The Roosevelt District Athletic League of the Eighth and Twelfth School Districts of the Public Schools Athletic League will hold its annual indoor games this evening at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory. All the public elementary schools on the east side of Manhattan Borough from Fourteenth to Fifty-ninth Street are included in the district. The program will consist of competition in interschool singing, physical training drills, and track and field games. An exclusive musical programme has been arranged and will be rendered by the schoolboy band of sixty pieces from Public School 21, Manhattan.

Invitations have been sent out by the District Superintendent, Mrs. Ruth G. McGray, to the President of the Board of Education, Thomas W. Churchill; Supt. William H. Maxwell, Dr. C. Ward Crampton, Director of Physical Training, and all the District Superintendents of the Department of Education, and acceptances have been received.

Desimone a Home Trainer Champion

Anthony Desimone won the final of the series of home trainer races which the New York Division of the Century Road Club Association has been holding during the Winter. Desimone's time for the half mile was 0:46 1-5. Desimone has been a consistent performer on the road, and has now taken up the track and won the first amateur race of the year at the Newark Velodrome. Summary of the final home trainer race:

First, Anthony Desimone, 0:46 1-5; second, Edwin Jensen, 0:54 3-5; third, Joseph Naphtal, 0:58 3-5; fourth, Robert C. Lipsett, 0:59 1-5; fifth, Isadore Taub, 0:59 3-5.

TWO NEW YORKERS IN GOLF SEMI-FINALS

Parrish and Marston Both Win and Will Be Opponents Today.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 30.—Two New Yorkers remain in the running for the chief cup of the Country Club of Atlantic City golf tournament, which was brought to the semi-final stage today. They are James C. Parrish, JrJ., of the National Golf Links of America, and Maxwell R. Marston of Baltusrol.

Parrish's opponent in the next round will be Marston, while in the other half of the bracket Maurice E. Risley of the home club will clash with Herbert B. Newton, the solitary Philadelphian, to survive in the chief division.

Many extra hole matches were in order today, the longest being between A. F. Smith, Jr., of Berkshire, and Harry F. Rebmann of White Marsh, in the beaten eight division of the third sixteen. Smith won after five extra holes.

Risley simply romped away with both of his matches today, decisively defeating A. H. Johnson, a promising local golfer. Risley displayed by far the best golf of the day in his afternoon round against Wootten, going out in 36 and recording 3¾ on the other three holes played.

Marston advanced at the expense of C. A. Bogart of Toronto, the lone remaining Canadian, and Thomas P. Endicott of the home club, although the margins were not wide. In fact, Marston was held by both men until the late holes of the matches. The former interscholastic champion had difficulty with his putting at times. The summary:

First Sixteen, First Round.—Maurice E. Risley, Atlantic City, beat A. H. Johnson, Sleepy Hollow, 7 and 6; Thomas B. Wooten, Atlantic City, beat A. E. Kennedy, University of Pennsylvania, 3 and 1; Herbert B. Newton, Frankford, beat H. J. Gormley, Atlantic City, 5 and 4; John H. Clapp, Chevy Chase, beat Dr. A. W. Westney, Atlantic City, 1 up, (19 holes;) James C. Parrish, Jr., National Links, beat Chester L. Maxwell, Trenton, 3 and 1; H. Wellington Wood, Old York Road, beat Hugh L. Willoughby, Philadelphia Country Club, 6 and 5; Maxwell R. Harston, Baltusrol, beat C. A. Bogart, Toronto, 3 and 1; Thomas P. Endicott, Atlantic City, beat G. B. Adams, National Links, by default.

Second Round—Risley beat Wooten, 7 and 6; Newton beat Clapp, 5 and 4; Parrish beat Wood, 3 and 2; Marston beat Endicott, 3 and 2.

Second Sixteen.—First Round—Henry W. Leeds, Atlantic City, beat Herbert W. Hemphill, Atlantic City, 3 and 2; R. C. Maxwell, Trenton, beat Samuel Allison, Midland, 5 and 4; Clinton B. Price, Ocean City, beat H. John Hiemenz, Lancaster, 1 up, (22 holes;) H. Palmer, Bon Air, beat A. F. Huston, St. David's, 1 up, (19 holes;) Wade E. Wilson, Atlantic City, beat A. F. Smith, Jr., Berkshire, 2 and 1; T. J. Bray, Youngstown, beat D. C. Reed, Atlantic City, 5 and 4; Joseph N. Reiber, Atlantic City, beat W. J. MacFarland, Atlantic City, 2 and 1; Dr. Frederick H. McCall, Atlantic City, beat Walter Smedley, Atlantic City, 1 up.

Second Round—R. C. Mexwell beat Leeds, 5 anud 3; Price beat Palmer, 5 and 3; Wilson beat Bray, 2 and 1; Reiber beat McCall, 1 up, (20 holes.)

Third Sixteen.—First Round—J. Haines Lippincott, Atlantic Sity, beat Louis Stadler, Atlantic City, 3 and 2; Charles A. Mills, Berkshire, beat George W. Statzell, Aronimink, by default; R. A. Balfe, South Shore, beat George S. Franklin, Pine Valley, 6 and 5; Henry McSweeney, Seaview, beat J. M. Thompson, Spring Haven, 3 and 2; Dr. Theodore Seneman, Atlantic City, beat A. F. Smith, Jr., Berkshire, 1 up; Percy Thomas, Atlantic City, beat Henry F. Rebmann, White Marsh, 4 and 2; H. C. Edwards, Atlantic City, beat Dr. Moore Stevens, Atlantic City, 1 up; S. L. Knisell, Atlantic City, beat Dr. Emery Marvel, Atlantic City, 2 and 1.

Second Round—Lippincott beat Mills, 4 and 2; McSweeney beat Balfe, 4 and 2; Senseman beat Thomas, 1 up; Edwards beat Knisell, 3 and 1.

Mayer Defeats Gallagher with Cue.

Joseph Mayer of Philadelphia, last night added another victory to his list when he defeated Tom Gallagher, a veteran billiardist, in an exhibition match of 18.2 balk line at Maurice Daly's Academy, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, by the score of 300 to 158 in sixteen innings. Mayer displayed excellent form, and had the ivories under his central throughout, scoring his 300 points in sixteen innings. He gave an excellent exhibition of nursing when he tallied a run of ninety-six points. His other high runs were thirty-eight and thirty-seven, and he averaged 18 12-16. Gallagher made high runs of thirty-six and thirty-nine, with an average of 10 8-15.

Columbia Football Team to Play University Heights Eleven Next Fall.

Columbia will play New York University in football next Fall, according to a report given out at Columbia yesterday afternoon. Harry A. Fisher, graduate manager of athletics, said that although no game could be arranged with the Violet on Thanksgiving Day as originally planned, because New York University plays Rutgers on that date, nevertheless a date will be arranged suitable to both teams. The special committee at work in arranging the Blue and White football schedule for next Fall plans to report next week, when the card will be announced.

Over a dozen applications from prominent football coaches are being considered by this committee, and a selection will in all probability be announced at the same time as the schedule. One rumor has it that a coach of one of the conference elevens has applied for the job, and his application is being given especial consideration. No confirmation of this rumor could be obtained yesterday from Harry Fisher.

OUR VARIETY SHOW
No. 6: $20 and $22

With the close of our Variety Show—this week devoted to illustrating in our windows day by day the wide Variety of suits we offer at various prices, we are glad to wind up with the $20 and $22 goods.

In the rapid expansion of our business we sometimes fear that some of our old friends, accustomed to buying suits from us at about these figures, may have felt that because of the emphasis laid on the higher priced goods, we were neglecting the more modest prices.

Of course we are proud of the fact that with the improved style and finish which years have brought to our product, we have had a steadily increasing demand for our goods from men who have been paying custom tailors much more than we need ask.

For such men we have combed the markets of the world for the finest woolens obtainable, have searched for exclusive patterns, and have achieved results.

But in our progress toward the day when all men who can afford the finest woolens will look to clothes of our sort, we have never forgotten the great body of our staunch friends who look to us for service and value—for first rate suits which they can depend on at prices like $20 and $22.

We give them the Value, and besides that we offer such wide Variety as we are showing to-day.

Everything men and boys wear.

NATIONAL TRAP SHOOTING—TURF

115 TRAP CRACKS IN NATIONAL SHOOT

G. L. Lyons Leads Record Field in Preliminary Event at Travers Island.

Several records went by the board in the preliminary competition of the tenth annual amateur trap-shooting championship of America, which started yesterday, at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club. The opening contest consisted of a 200-"bird" event, also the second leg of the home-and-home series between the New York Athletic Club and the Boston Athletic Association.

Weather conditions could hardly have been less favorable to the marksmen. There was a strong northeast wind blowing down the Sound, and the light throughout the day was extremely poor, and, to make matters worse, this was accompanied by a heavy Scotch mist, which naturally did not add to the comfort of the gunners. However, in spite of all these disadvantages, the scores were remarkably good, and the shooting generally was far above the average.

The first new record to be made was in the matter of attendance, 115 gunners facing the traps. Virtually every notable gunner in the country was on hand. They came from all over the United States.

G. L. Lyons established the high mark for the day, when he led all the other contestants, with a total of 191, which, under the conditions that existed yesterday, was considered a truly remarkable performance. These figures tie the best score ever made before these traps. The same score was made last year by R. L. Spotts, in the club championship tournament. This marksman also held the former record, 184, which has stood for many years as the high mark for the preliminary meeting before the big event.

While wearing the winged foot emblem of the New York Athletic Club, G. L. Lyons hails from Durham, N. C., and is no stranger to titular honors, as he held the world's championship twice, winning the title in successive years, in 1912 at Atlantic City and in 1913 at Wilmington, Del. Other important events which he has won are the double target championship in 1904, the Southern Handicap in 1908, the Eastern Handicap in 1909, and the preliminary to the Grand American Handicap in 1907.

The four next best scores to the leader were held by A. B. Richardson, Dover, Del., 190; R. L. Spotts, N. Y. A. C., 186; J. L. Snow, Boston A. A., 185, and J. C. Burns, N. Y. A. C., 184.

New York took the second leg of the home-and-home series from Boston by the score of 1,783 to 1,694. In the opening event, which was held recently in Boston, the gunners from the Hub defeated the New Yorkers by 27 "birds." But as the local marksmen had an advantage of 89 over their opponents yesterday, this gives them a balance of 62 in their favor.

The second teams also had a ten-men match. This was easily won by the N. Y. A. C., who defeated the Boston A. A. by 1,648 to 1,433.

The championship today will be 200 "birds" at unknown angles and unknown traps, 50 under expert rules and 25 pairs. The scores:

Princeton Racquet Wielders Win

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 30.—Princeton defeated Williams College at tennis this afternoon, 5 matches to 1. Rockland and Cook scored the single point for Williams by taking the second of the doubles matches from Vandeventer and Coffey, the Tiger pair. The feature match was the singles between Captain Church, one of Princeton's men, and Captain Cutler of Williams. Cutler put up a brilliant exhibition of tennis in the early games, taking three straight from the intercollegiate champion. With the score 40 to 15 on his own service in the fourth game, he suddenly went to pieces and Church ran out the set in six straight games. Cutler fought hard in the second set, but was unable to play consistently against Church's remarkably accurate placement shots and his sharp over-head work. The summary:

Singles.—Church, Princeton, defeated Cutler, Williams, 8—6, 6—4; Vandeventer, Princeton, defeated Maynard, Williams, 8—6, 10—8; Kidder, Princeton, defeated Rockland, Williams, 6—0, 6—1; Cooper, Princeton, defeated Cook, Williams, 10—8, 6—1.

Doubles.—Church and Kidder, Princeton, defeated Cutler and Maynard, Williams, 8—6, 6—0, 6—4; Rockland and Cook, Williams, defeated Vandeventer and Coffey, Princeton, 6—1, 6—4.

NEW SCHOOLBOY RECORDS.

Youngsters in Eleventh District Perform Well in Athletics.

Two city records and four local marks were eclipsed in the twelfth annual championship indoor track and field meeting of the eleventh district of the Public Schools Athletic League, held last night in the Twenty-third Regiment Armory, Brooklyn. For the seventh consecutive time the point banner was carried off by the representatives of Public School 9, who recorded 72 points. Second place went to P. S. 93, with 45, while P. S. 12 was third with 33. Other scores were: P. S. 3, 19; P. S. 11, 9; P. S. 157, 5; P. S. 44, 3, and P. S. 45, 1.

The performance of C. Fairbanks of Public School No. 93 in the unlimited weight high jump stood out as the feature of the meet. This lad, who is only 15 years old, cleared the bar at 5 feet 3½ inches, beating the city record by a quarter of an inch, and the best district figures by 2½ inches. Unfortunately for Fairbanks, this record will not go in the P. S. A. L. book, for only marks established in city championship meets are recognized. This youngster has all the earmarks of a jumped, a remarkable spring and splendid style, and with proper tutoring should become a star.

In the 880-yard unlimited weight relay another city record was beaten, when the P. S. 93 team triumphed in 1:47 1-5.

Distant records established were: Eight-pound put, 34 feet 8 inches, by L. Nader, P. S. 93; running high jump, 100-pound class, 4 feet 8 inches, by F. Logan, P. S. 11; 40-yard dash, 70-pound class, 0:06 15, by E. Griffiths, P. S. 93; standing broad jump, 85-pound class, 8 feet, by F. Winkler, P. S. 93.

In a special exhibition 110-yard low hurdles race John J. Eller of the Irish-American A. C. defeated Walter Bursch of the New York A. C. by a small margin. The summary:

600-Yard Dash, (100-pound class.)—Won by W. Kney, P. S. 9; H. King, P. S. 9, second; I. Seiner, P. S. 9, third; T. Anderson, P. S. 9, fourth. Time—0:07 4-5.

70-Yard Dash, (115-pound class.)—Won by P. Balda, P. S. 9; H. Taylor, P. S. 9, second; J. Walkins, P. S. 3, third; R. Coffey, P. S. 3, fourth. Time—0:08 2-5.

40-Yard Dash, (70-pound class.)—Won by E. Griffiths, P. S. 93; M. Peck, P. S. 12, second; G. Meeker, P. S. 3, third; T. Hartly, P. S. 93, fourth. Time—0:06 1-5. New record.

Standing Broad Jump, (85-pound class.)—Won by F. Winkler, P. S. 93, with 8 feet; A. Froy, P. S. 3, second, with 7 feet 8½ inches; W. Young, P. S. 9, third, with 7 feet 8 inches; D. Banker, P. S. 3, fourth, with 7 feet 3 inches. New record.

Standing Broad Jump, (100-Pound Class.)—Won by C. Lindberg, P. S. 9, with 7 feet 7 inches; E. Barbier, P. S. 93, second, with 7 feet 4 inches; H. Olive, P. S. 9, third, with 7 feet 3 inches; G. West, P. S. 12, fourth, with 7 feet 1 inch.

Running High Jump, (100-Pound Class.)—Won by F. Logan, P. S. 11, with 4 feet 8 inches; R. Walsh, P. S. 9, second, with 4 feet 7 inches; H. Maas, P. S. 9, third, with 4 feet 7 inches; L. Payne, P. S. 3, fourth, with 4 feet 6 inches. New record.

Eight-Pound Shot-Put, (115-Pound Class.)—Won by L. Mader, P. S. 93, with 34 feet 6 inches; L. Horstman, P. S. 12, second, with 31 feet 9¾ inches; L. Kelly, P. S. 9, third, with 31 feet 7¾ inches; W. Marquez, P. S. 93, fourth, with 30 feet 8 inches.

Standing Broad Jump, (115-Pound Class.)—Won by L. Turkington, P. S. 9, with 8 feet 5¼ inches; C. Valentine, P. S. 93, second, with 8 feet 4½ inches; F. Steele, P. S. 12, third, with 8 feet 2¼ inches; H. Weisman, P. S. 9, fourth, with 7 feet 9½ inches.

Running High Jump, (85-Pound Class.)—Won by C. Messner, P. S. 157, with 4 feet 3 inches; H. Murphy, P. S. 12, second, with 4 feet; A. Hanson, P. S. 9, third, with 3 feet 11 inches; H. Uhrbrock, P. S. 9, fourth, with 3 feet 10 inches.

12-Pound Shot-Put, (Unlimited Weight Class.)—Won by K. Graef, P. S. 9, with 32 feet 4 inches; A. Matteo, P. S. 12, second, with 30 feet 11 inches; W. Gledhill, P. S. 12, third, with 30 feet 4½ inches; I. Hand, P. S. 93, fourth, with 30 feet.

360-Yard Relay, (85-Pound Class.)—Won by P. S. 12, (Kipp, Donahue, Hansen, and Kelly;) P. S. 3, (Tinex, Troy, Rosenbaum, and Ring;) second; P. S. 93, (Winkler, Conroy, Bratten, and Miller,) third; P. S. 45, (Walsh, Syme, Miller, and Freedman,) fourth. Time—0:48 2-5.

440-Yard Relay, (100-Pound Class.)—Won by P. S. 9, (Kney, King, Seiner, and Wilson;) P. S. 3, (Corrigan, Smith, Fowler, and Tramor,) second; P. S. 12, (McCann, Hausley, MacKin, and Gambink,) third; P. S. 11, (Gluck, Hess, Logan, and Madigan,) fourth. Time—0:59 1-5.

Running High Jump, (Unlimited Weight Class.)—Won by C. Fairbanks, P. S. 93, with 5 feet 3¼ inches; H. Banfill, P. S. 9, second, with 5 feet; H. Otto, P. S. 9, third, with 4 feet 9 inches; R. Clark, P. S. 3, fourth, with 4 feet 8 inches.

880-Yard Relay, (Unlimited Weight Class.)—Won by P. S. 93, (Fairbanks, Matthews, Moffett, and Valentine;) P. S. 9, (Daniels, Graef, Nelson, and Boll,) second; P. S. 12, (Horstetter, Hartmann, Tatro, and Beverly,) third; P. S. 3, (Skinner, Watkins, Hardy, and Zimmerman,) fourth. Time—1:47 1-5.

ATHLETIC SEASON OPEN.

Princeton Will Have the Headliner Today with an Open Meet.

Provided the weather conditions are suitable, the outdoor track and field season will be inaugurated this afternoon. College, club, and scholastic athletes will be seen in competition throughout the metropolitan district, and the walkers will compete in a thirteen-mile contest for evening high school boys through the streets of the city.

Princeton University has the distinction again this year of holding the first open meet of the season, and has been repaid by receiving an entry that rivals any named in previous seasons. Owing to the infancy of the season, a number of the star club athletes will be missing from the games, but their absence will be made up by leading college performers. Pennsylvania has entered a strong team in the meet, while individuals will represent Yale, Harvard, and other Eastern colleges.

There will be eight track events—100 and 220 yard dashes, quarter-mile run, 220-yard low hurdles, 120-yard high hurdles, half-mile, mile, and two-mile runs. The field events include broad jump, high jump, pole vault, hammer throw, and shotput.

Practically all the New York and Brooklyn schools have entered men in the annual interscholastic meet at Stevens Tech., Hoboken. The Jerseyites always conduct one of the best schoolboy athletic carnivals of the outdoor season, and, judging from the quality of the entries, this afternoon's affair should prove no exception. The usual program of scholastic events will be decided.

A number of local schoolboys will journey to Ithaca for the fourth annual Cornell University interscholastic meet at Schoellkopf Oval. Twenty-eight schools are entered, and among the number are some of the best institutions in the East. Mercersburg Academy, which has won the meet twice, is favorite again this year.

Five hundred and forty-one boys are entered in the Evening High School walk, which will start promptly at 1:30 o'clock today in front of Public School 52, near Dyckman Street. The finish will be in the College of the City of New York Stadium.

Cornell Sweeps Tennis Match.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTON, Penn., April 30.—Cornell made a clean sweep of the tennis match with Lafayette on the Lafayette courts, and rolled up a score of 6 to nothing. Reynolds gave Thompson a hard fight in the singles, and Captain Burn gave Hunter a good rub, but the remainder of the matches were easy for the Ithacans, who were very fast. Summary:

Singles.—Hunter, Cornell, defeated Burn, Lafayette, 4—6, 6—3, 6—1; Thompson, Cornell, defeated Reynolds, Lafayette, 6—0, 5—7, 6—4; Blair, Cornell, defeated Keller, Lafayette, 6—0, 6—0; Benton, Cornell, defeated Pardee, Lafayette, 6—3, 6—.

Doubles.—Blair and Benton, Cornell, defeated Burn and Pardee, Lafayette, 8—6, 9—7; Thompson and Hunter, Cornell, defeated Reynolds and Keller, Lafayette, 6—0, 6—1.

Many Entries for Finley Walk.

Five hundred and fifty-one evening high school men have qualified and entered for the thirteen-mile walk through Manhattan today. Supt. Henry E. Jenkins will be present to see the long line off at 1:30 P. M. The start will be made from Public School 52, near the Dyckman Street Subway station. A map of the route has been issued to each contestant, and Dr. Finley expects to greet the walkers on their arrival at the City College Stadium at 5 o'clock. Many of the contestants are mature men, and a fine show of athletic ability is expected. The entry is a record-breaking one, and the walk will go on, rain or shine.

DEVEREAUX JUMPER BEST IN 'CHASE

Philadelphia Social Throng Cheers When Conqueror Wins at Elkridge.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 30.—With the cheers of more than 5,000 persons ringing in his ears, A. J. Antelo Devereaux of Philadelphia piloted his chestnut gelding Conqueror to victory in the running of the second annual cross-country steeplechase race for the Elkridge Hunt Cup today on the estate of Mrs. F. Gittings Merryman, near Cockeysville. It was with little or no trouble that the aged son of Contestor and Luff won, leading Thomas E. Cottman's Louis Greenberg, with B. Blakiston in the saddle, between the finish flags, with four lengths to spare, while Howard Bruce's Whistler, ridden by George Blakiston, came in for the third honors, nearly fifteen lengths behind the second horse.

The weather conditions were perfect and the course was in good condition despite last night's heavy rain. Some of the best-known society people of Washington, Philadelphia, and New York were present.

Like the two previous Green Spring Valley classics this season, the race went to a visitor, and when Conqueror galloped past the judges it was only natural that the Quaker contingent should shout, and they did.

Twenty-one thoroughbreds, representing the best timber toppers in this section of the country, were originally named to start, but when the owners finished withdrawing their horses, the field was reduced to ten. Conqueror was installed the choice.

All of the horses were bunched at the first jump, and it was remarkable that some of them did not fall. Mr. Devereaux immediately took Conqueror to the head of the field, with Pocopson, ridden by Gilbert Mather of Philadelphia, and Harpist II., following in close order. Not more than two lengths separated the horses when they went over the third obstacle. Here Mr. Devereaux landed rather flat with the Contestor gelding, and came near running into a tree. Pocopson took the lead in going over the sixth jump, but never drew away or appeared dangerous.

After taking the fence near the judges' stand when about three-quarters of the course had been completed, Pocopson weakened and Conqueror shot to the front. Louie Greenberg also began to move up and it appeared as if the Conqueror would have to be ridden out to get the decision. However, the former made several bad jumps, going over the fences awkwardly, while Conqueror fenced faultlessly. These jumps enabled the latter to pull away, and on coming over the hill he was leading by six lengths. When he crossed the finish, Conqueror was only galloping. Louie Greenberg came with a burst of speed, but too late. The summaries:

A. J. Antelo Devereaux's Conqueror, 165, (owner,) 6 to 5, 1 to 4, and out, won. Thomas E. Cottman's Louie Greenberg, 165, (B. Blakiston,) 3 to 1, even, and 1 to 2, second; Howard Bruce's Whistler, 165, (George Blakiston,) 3 to 1, 6 to 5, and 3 to 5, third. Time—9:58. Also ran—Louis Ewing's Harpist II., J. S. Wilson, Jr.'s, Rambo, S. Proctor Brady's Areno, Gresham H. Poe's Prince Hal, Brandywine Stable's Pocopson, Albert G. Ober, Jr.'s, King's Lynn, and H. L. Haughton's Felix.

HOW TO REACH RACE MEET.

Best Motor Route to Rockaway Hunt Club Matinee Outlined.

The first outdoor social event of the season from the sportsman's angle will be the Spring meet of the Rockaway Hunt Club at New Hewlett Bay Park, Hewlett, L. I., today. The motor run from New York is just long enough to be pleasant, and the club has made special provision for the comfort and convenience of automobilists. Directly opposite the finishing line and the water jumps a sloping bank provides a natural amphitheatre. This space has been reserved for parking automobiles, and owners may thus witness the races from their cars.

Two new exits from the club property to the main road have been provided this season, and the congestion formerly experienced in leaving the grounds will be obviated. Detailed running directions provided by the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America are as follows:

From the Club House go north on Broadway to Fifty-ninth Street, then east across Queensboro Bridge and straight ahead across the Plaza; cross Jackson Avenue 3.0 miles; then cross the viaduct and keep straight ahead on Thompson Avenue. Cross the railroad 5.0 miles, and take right fork into Queens Boulevard at Winfield 5.4 miles. Again cross the railroad at 5.8 miles and follow the main road past Far Hills Station 8.4 miles. Continue on the Boulevard to a cafe, where turn left into Hillside Avenue, 10.3 miles to the Peace Monument in Jamaica.

At this point turn right into Bergen Avenue, cross Fulton Street 11.7 miles, and keep straight ahead on the Merrick Road; cross Central Avenue at 13.0 miles; cross the railroad 14.4 miles and keep straight ahead through Springfield 14.7 miles and Valley Stream 17.8 miles. Again cross the railroad 18.1 miles to the square in Lynbrook 19.2 miles. At this point turn sharply to the right and follow the main road southwest to Hewlett, 21 miles.

Van Cluse Wins 1,000 Guineas.

NEWMARKET, England, April 30.—The 1,000 guineas stake for three-year-old fillies, run over the Rowley mile course here today, was won by Vau Cluce. Silver Tag was second, and Bright was third. Fifteen horses started. The betting was 5 to 2 against Vau Cluse, 4 to 1 against Silver Tag, and 10 to 1 against Bright.

APRIL TRANSACTIONS.

Transactions on stocks on the New York Stock Exchange for the month of April aggregated 21,045,532 shares, which was a total in excess of the combined trading of the first three months of the year and the largest total for any month since January, 1910, when the dealings amounted to 24,116,544 shares. As compared with March last month's total showed an increase of 13,105,338 shares, and as compared with the corresponding month last year of 13,907,140 shares. There were seven days on which the total was above one million shares, as follows: 9th, 1,282,545; 13th, 1,057,207; 14th, 1,038,564; 15th, 1,206,677; 16th, 1,110,796; 19th, 1,441,383, and 20th, 1,244,406. The total of the 19th was the largest since Sept. 27, 1911, when the total was 1,683,729 shares. The smallest total for any full day was 523,885 shares on the 7th. For the Saturday half-holiday the maximum total was 810,771 shares, which was also the heaviest trading on any Saturday since Jan. 15, 1910, when 855,212 shares were traded in. The minimum total was 28,209 shares on the 3d.

The following table gives total transactions for the month of April and the first four months of this year as compared with the like periods in previous years:

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

War news was the chief influence on the Consolidated Exchange during the greater part of the day. In the early trading prices showed some unsettlement, but later the upward movement was resumed under the leadership of the war order shares. Again toward the close the market became reactionary, and except on special instances the final prices were on a slightly lower level than those of Thursday.

ASKS INTER-MET. FOR FACTS

Service Board Takes Up the Proposed Reorganization.

The Public Service Commission yesterday passed unanimously the resolution proposed by Commissioner Hayward with regard to the reorganization plan of the Interborough-Metropolitan Company. This calls on the Interborough and the New York Railways Companies, or any other railroad company the stock of which is owned by the Interborough-Metropolitan, for detailed information as to the consolidation scheme, and in particular "as to whether there will be any transfer of any of the stock of such companies as the result of such plan, and particularly as to the method by which it is proposed to carry out such plan and transfer such stock on the books of the companies without violation of Section 54 of the Public Service Commissions law."

The information will be considered carefully to see whether there is anything that gives the commission jurisdiction over the consolidation, and whether there is anything to which the commission objects. Section 54 of the Public Service Commissions law contains this clause to qualify the prohibition of the holding of 10 per cent. of the stock of any railroad company by any but a railroad corporation:

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the holding of stock heretofore lawfully acquired, or to prevent, upon the surrender or exchange of said stock pursuant to a reorganization plan, the purchase, acquisition, taking, or holding of a proportionate amount of stock of any new corporation organized to take over at foreclosure or other sale the property of any corporation whose stock has been thus surrendered or exchanged.

The Interborough-Metropolitan is likely to argue that this precisely fits the case. Commissioner Hayward, however, contends the clause does not apply to any transfer of stock except by foreclosure or other similar sale.

NEW M., K. & T. NOTE PLAN.

Directors Already Preparing for Payment of Extended Paper.

Encouragement for the holders of Missouri, Kansas & Texas notes was held out yesterday in an announcement made after a meeting of Directors called to declare the extension plan effective. In this notice it was stated that arrangements were being considered by the management which contemplate the payment of all of the extended notes at or before maturity.

In declaring the exchange of new 6 per cent. notes for the maturing notes effective the Directors extended the time for depositing the old issue to the close of business on May 4.

ROCK ISLAND PAYS TODAY.

To Meet Interest on All Securities Except Equipment Notes.

All of the regular May 1 interest on Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway securities, with the exception of the interest on $505,000 equipment notes, will be paid today. This includes payments on the $5,078,000 4 per cent. gold bonds of 1902, due 1919, the $5,410,000 Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf Railroad consolidated 5 per cent. bonds of 1902, due 1952, and equipment notes amounting to about $500,000. Payments will be made from cash on hand.

A Director of the Rock Island said yesterday that the time allowance of thirty days would be made use of in the payment of interest on other equipment notes amounting to $505,000. The interest on these notes, it was said, would be met without any trouble.

The $2,500,000 bank loan which fell due yesterday was extended last week for six months at the regular 6 per cent. rate. It was said yesterday that the Rock Island would have an easy month in June with only $112,000 to pay out in interest and maturities. July, however, will be an extremely heavy month, with $3,200,000 of obligations. The court, so far, has authorized $1,494,000 receivers' certificates, which will be applied today to meet the May 1 installment of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway's 4 per cent. gold bonds of 1902.

It is understood that the Rock Island will soon appear in the market for equipment, and that another issue of receivers' certificates will be asked for to buy the supplies.

FINANCIAL.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC FINANCES OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, CITY HALL.

New Orleans, April 28th, 1915.

The City of New Orleans, acting under authority of Act 179 of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana for the year 1908, ratified by constitutional amendment, and now a part of the Constitution of the State of Louisiana, will receive sealed proposals at the office of the Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans up to twelve (12) o'clock noon, on the 25th day of May, 1915, for the purchase of $500,000.00 in face value of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans, authorized by and to be issued under and subject to the act aforementioned, and the constitutional amendment ratifying same, and of the numbers, denominations and maturities of the authorized issue of $2,000,000, and in the form of and in accordance with the bond schedule of the maturities of the entire authorized issue as given and prescribed by an ordinance of the City of New Orleans, being Ordinance No. 8628, N. C. S., approved May 14, 1912, and Ordinance No. 2340 Commission Council Series, approved April 20th, 1915, of said city, authorizing the present offering.

Three hundred and fifty of said bonds are of the denomination of $1000 and three hundred of the denomination of $500, and bear interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, evidenced by coupons attached, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July, respectively of each year.

Said bonds are the second issuance out of the total amount authorized by said act and constitutional amendment, and are of the numbers, amounts and maturities, as follows, to-wit:

Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($350,000) of said bonds shall be of the denomination of $1000 each, and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000) of the denomination of $500 each, and of the numbers, amounts and maturities as follows, to-wit:

Fifty (50) bonds, Nos. 6451 to 6500, inclusive, of the denomination of $1000, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1953;

Fifty (50) bonds, Nos. 6401 to 6450, inclusive, of the denomination of $1000, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1952;

One hundred (100) bonds, Nos. 5801 to 5900, inclusive, of the denomination of $500, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July x, 1952;

Fifty (50) bonds, Nos. 6351 to 6400, inclusive, of the denomination of $1000, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1951;

One hundred (100) bonds, Nos. 5701 to 5800, inclusive, of the denomination of $500, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1951.

Said bonds are subject to call by the City of New Orleans on the first day of July, 1939, or on any interest day thereafter, at par and accrued interest on thirty (30) days notice of its intention to so redeem, published in the official newspaper of the City of New Orleans.

They are, by the aforesaid act and constitutional amendment, exempt from all State, Parish and Municipal taxes, and may be legally invested for the estates of minors and of interdicts, and are receivable by State, Parish and Municipal officers, where, by law, deposits of bonds are allowed or required to be made.

The payment of the principal and interest of said bonds is made a preferential charge upon the net revenues of the Public Belt Railroad of the City of New Orleans, and are and will be issued under and subject to the aforementioned statutes and ordinances, all of which are hereby referred to and made part of this advertisement for greater certainty and particularity.

Said proposals shall be received under and subject to the following conditions, to-wit:

Proposals must be in writing, sealed, and marked on the outside of the envelope "Proposals for the purchase of $500,000 of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans," and shall likewise be accompanied by a certified check on some chartered bank in the City of New Orleans, for an amount equal to one per cent. of the aggregate amount of the bid, which said check of the successful bidder or bidders shall be cashed and the proceeds retained by the City of New Orleans as a guarantee that the successful bidder or bidders will comply with its or their bids, and the said proceeds shall be applied to the payment of the bonds last delivered to the successful bidder or bidders, respectively. In case of the neglect or refusal to comply with any bid, the proceeds of said check shall be forfeited to the Public Belt Railroad Commission of the City of New Orleans.

No sale shall be made unless the aggregate of the bids received equals the full amount of the present offering of $500,000, in face value, and the adjudication shall be made to the highest bidder, provided, however, that no adjudication shall take place for less than par and accrued interest. All matured interest coupons shall be cut from said bonds and cancelled, and the successful bidder shall pay the interest which may have accrued on said bonds up to the date of delivery. The bonds shall be paid for in cash as fast as said bonds can be signed and delivered. All bonds will be delivered within thirty days from the opening of said bids. The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

Further particulars and information will be furnished on application to W. B. Thompson, Commissioner of Public Utilities, the Public Belt Railroad Commission, or to the undersigned. The final opinion of Wood & Oakley, lawyers, Chicago, Ill., as to the legality of this issue will be furnished to the successful bidder if so desired.

A. G. RICKS, Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans.

TO THE HOLDERS OF THE FIRST MORTGAGE 4% BONDS DUE JUNE 1, 1990, OF MISSOURI, KANSAS & TEXAS RAILWAY CO:

Your attention is called to the WARRANT attached to each FIRST MORTGAGE 4% BOND of this Company, due June 1, 1990, calling for the delivery, ON AND AFTER JUNE 1, 1915, at its office in the City of New York, of sheets of ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY COUPONS, for interest to become payable semi-annually thereafter to and including June 1, 1990.

Coupon sheets will be delivered to bondholders upon presentation of their bonds at the office of the Company, 71 Broadway, New York City, ON AND AFTER THE DATE NAMED, with the warrant attached. The sheets of coupons will be attached to the bonds, in accordance with recommendation of the Stock Exchange, and delivery made to the owners thereof with as little delay as possible.

J. B. BARNES, Asst. Treasurer.

Money for a Bank
A stockholder in a non-progressive business corporation might induce a majority of his associates, 700 non-residents owning $500,000, to exchange their capital for an authorized increase of stock in a banking institution. This would compel our liquidation and the cash proceeds would take up and pay for increased capital of bank; five-year voting agreement present bank officers possible. Replies, giving full details, will be held in confidence. Z 256 Times Annex.

PUBLIC NOTICES.

THE AETNA NATIONAL BANK, LOCATED at Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, is closing its affairs. All note holders and other creditors of the association are therefore hereby notified to present the notes and other claims for payment.
Dated at Hartford, Conn., April 28, 1915.

The sense of proportion was lost in yesterday's stock market in the convergence of trading sentiment upon one industrial issue which, until this week, had occupied a very unimportant place in the list of stocks. More than 220,000 shares of Westinghouse changed hands yesterday on a rising scale that made the net gain at the close of the day an even 8 points. In five days of this week Westinghouse shares have advanced 17½ points.

Ordinarily an advance of such proportions would have emphasized the need of caution, but in its present mood Wall Street is inclined to throw caution to the winds. No story of war-time orders is too wild to gain credence in speculative circles. The spirited demand for Westinghouse appeared to be justified, to some extent at least, by the admission made by Chairman Tripp yesterday of the receipt of a large amount of new orders to supply materials entirely outside of the electric company's regular line of manufactures. As nearly as could be learned, the company has received a round $27,000,000 of orders that are "firm," with the assurance of as much more if the business can be handled. With these orders in sight the speculative element on the Stock Exchange disregarded all figures published earnings as ancient history and looked hopefully toward profits which cannot possibly materialize for a number of months.

It was essentially a war-time, industrial market that registered close to a million shares yesterday. Next to Westinghouse, the greatest activity occurred in United States Steel, Allis-Chalmers, Amalgamated Copper, American Can, American Locomotive, Anaconda, Baldwin Locomotive, National Lead, New York Air Brake, Pressed Steel Car, and Utah Copper. The only railroad issues that could be compared to these stocks in point of activity were Union Pacific, Wabash common, Rock Island, Reading, and Interborough-Metropolitan common. The railroad shares appeared to be the victims of liquidation for funds with which to promote the movement in the industrials, for while nearly all of the industrial stocks named made big advances for the day, the active railroads failed to hold their own. Speculators had but one test to apply to a stock—could the company represented by it supply anything that might be sold to belligerents?

So fickle is the war-order speculator that Bethlehem Steel, which had engrossed his attention for so long, was almost forgotten yesterday, and on dealings of only 1,300 shares 3½ points were cut from its closing price of the day before. General Electric shared in the strength of its competitor and closed up 2⅝ points. American Steel Foundry gained 3¼ points, Baldwin 4½, Lackawanna Steel 4, New York Air Brake 6¼, and Virginia-Carolina Chemical 3⅜, all on the prospect of large profits to be obtained out of Europe's unhappy necessities.

Bullish sentiment was materially helped yesterday by the announcement that the extension of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas notes had been declared effective, and by the favorable reception given to new Wabash reorganization plans. The Interborough-Metropolitan issues were weaker on the announcement of an investigation of the proposed readjustment to be started by the Public Service Commission.

LONDON MARKET DULL.

News of Dunkirk Bombardment Causes Restriction in Trading.

LONDON, April 30.—Money in good supply; discount rates quiet.

Tomorrow's holiday restricted dealings on the Stock Exchange today, likewise the official confirmation of early rumors of the bombardment of Dunkirk. Talk of South Africa and India loans of £3,000,000 ($15,000,000) each affected gilt-edge issues somewhat, but China-Japan bonds and war loans were active. Copper shares were weak on the break of 60 shillings in the price of the metal. Rubber and tea shares were in demand.

The American department ruled irregular. Canadian Pacific was weak, while United States Steel and a few other leaders advanced on purchases. The close was steady.

Prices Weak on Paris Bourse.

PARIS, April 30.—Prices were weak on the Bourse today. Three per cent. rentes 72 francs 40 centimes for cash. Exchange on London 25 francs 56 centimes.

WABASH SYNDICATE FORMED

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and Allies Underwrite Reorganization Plan.

The new reorganization plan of the Wabash Railroad, which was completed after three and one-half years in a form which it is believed will be acceptable to security holders and State authorities, has been underwritten by a syndicate headed by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Responses made to offers to participate in the provision of $27,720,000, or any part of that sum not supplied by the Wabash security holders were so general that the formation of the syndicate was easily accomplished.

It may not be necessary to get the approval of the railroad commissions in the States traversed by the Wabash lines, it was said yesterday. The previous reorganization plan was abandoned after opposition from the Missouri Commission. It is the opinion of counsel for the committees that inasmuch as the latest plan contemplates a reduction of bonded debt and a readjustment within the present capitalization it may not be essential to submit the plan. The question will probably be put up to the several commissions, and if they are not in accord with this idea it is expected that the plan will be held up until they have passed upon it.

BROKERS' FIRMS DISSOLVED.

Two Reorganizations Announced in Stock Exchange Houses.

Among changes in Stock Exchange firms announced yesterday to take place today was the dissolution of Taylor, Livingston & Co. A new partnership has been formed under the name of Henry B. Livingston & Co., with offices at 100 Broadway. The partners are Henry F. Godfrey, Cortlandt E. Taylor, and Henry B. Livingston, the last named being the board member.

The firm of Nichols, MacDonell & Scheider also has been dissolved and another formed to be known as Nichols & Scheider, 60 Broadway. The members are Erickson N. Nichols and Edmund J. Scheider. A. [illegible] MacDonell will be in the Cotton Exchange Building.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Westinghouse Dallied at First.

It seemed to many impatient followers of Westinghouse's fortunes in early trading yesterday that the stock gave rather deliberate reflection to additional facts about the company's war orders. Starting unchanged from the previous day's closing figure, 98, it advanced to par within a few minutes, but at this level was met with a sizable supply of offerings, and a seesaw movement occurred. In a normal market, of course, a 2-point rise within a quarter hour would satisfy the most rabid of bulls. With a war stock running wild, or giving signs of running wild, however, an advance of this amount is considered meagre by holders of the shares, particularly those who recently bought. So traders on the long side chafed more or less while quotations were fluctuating from a fraction above par to a point below, and they had to wait until nearly noon for action with the longed-for flavor. It came quickly after a start was made, and the top price of 106 was reached under the pressure of rapid buying in relatively small lots.

Market Broadened Late in the Day.

It was noticeable that the market broadened substantially after Westinghouse and its companions had been lifted to their best prices in the third hour of trading. There were stretches of three or four minutes each when the tape recorded a steady stream of transactions in Steel, Union Pacific, and other standard issues, without the symbol for Westinghouse appearing once. The early trading, it seemed, had found interest among traders so closely centred in the war stock group that the others had been neglected.

An Interesting Possibility.

Nearly every idea that has been put forth for the development of transportation systems in the last few years was taken up at one time or another by the late E. H. Harriman. So with the suggestion that has been going around financial circles that the Union Pacific should get control of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas by putting up its credit for the weaker road. Mr. Harriman thought once that he could buy control of the M., K. & T., and hitch it up with his other lines, and if he had been allowed a freer hand by the Federal Government he might have done so. His death ended a number of half-formed plans, but the M., K. & T. proposal still lives. A prominent interest in Union Pacific said yesterday that an effort had been made to get support for the plan, but that the times were not propitious.

The New Factor.

A banker under whose hands more than one railroad's tangled finances have been straightened out was asked yesterday what the next stage in the Wabash reorganization would be. "Let us see," he said, counting off on his fingers the things accomplished and the things remaining to be done. "First, the reorganization work by the committees, then the underwriting, then the submission of the plain to State authorities, then the foreclosure sale, then the blackmailer. After the last, who knows?"

Seekers After Easy Money.

Wherever two or more persons foregather in the financial district these days the talk quickly turns to the fabulous profits which acquaintances have made in the rise in stocks. Chairman Somebody's secretary, using $100 of real cash, has taken $2,000 out of Bethlehem and Westinghouse; a manicurist in any one of half a hundred barber's shops has made enough to buy a house; a theatrical man has closed out with almost a million. It is very disturbing to the plodder, accustomed to seeing $1 saved become $1.04 in twelve months. Sometimes it bothers him so that he draws his dollar and its associates from a savings bank and follows the crowd. The lightning may strike him, but the usual result is that either the bull market flattens out at about that time, or that it carefully turns aside to avoid the stock on which the plodder has staked his fortunes. It is human nature to confess profits and conceal losses. If it were not so it would be an easy matter to offset every story of speculative gains with another of speculative losses.

Utility Company Earnings.

Gross earnings of 275 public utility companies in 1914 amounted to $896,161,591, according to reports made to The Financial World, a total of $41,438,439, or 4.88 per cent., greater than in the preceding year, and an increase of 12 per cent. over the record of 1912. Of this gross, $375,038,910 was saved as net income, a gain of $10,454,368, or 2.86 per cent., over 1914 and 9.72 per cent. over 1912. The concerns, all told, disbursed in interest charges $152,929,180, nearly 5 per cent. more than in the year previous, and paid dividends aggregating $139,194,564, an increase over 1913 of 6.88 per cent. The companies have stocks and bonds outstanding to the total of $5,004,252,793.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

George W. Gale, private secretary to George F. Baker, Chairman of the First National Bank, has resigned to become a member of the staff of Charles Starek, National Bank Examiner of the New York district.

W. Channing Burbank and William L. Meffert have been admitted to the Stock Exchange firm of Clark, Childs & Co., as partners.

S. P. Larkin, formerly of Larkin & Reutter, will hereafter deal in high grade investment securities under the name of S. P. Larkin Co., with offices at 43 Exchange Place.

The Bankers Trust Company, as corporate trustee, under the first mortgage of the International Agricultural Corporation securing the first mortgage and collateral trust 5 per cent. 20-year sinking fund gold bonds, will purchase on May 19 for the sinking fund bonds to the amount of $311,000. No offers will be accepted in excess of 103 and accrued interest. Offers must be submitted on or before May 14.

NO NEW HAVEN DISPUTE.

President Elliott Thinks Mistake Was Made at Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Secretary Wilson today appointed Clifton Reeves of Trenton, N. J., and Patrick Gilday of Morrisdale, Penn., Commissioners of Conciliation for a New Haven Railroad labor dispute at New Haven.

John A. Moffit of Orange, N. J., was appointed a Commissioner of Conciliation to handle a strike of coal miners at Hazleton, Penn.

NEW HAVEN, April 30.—President Howard Elliott of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, in a statement issued late today in reference to the appointment of Commissioners of Conciliation for a reported labor dispute on the New Haven Road at New Haven, says the officials of the company know of no dispute between the company and its employes, and thinks that some road other than the New Haven must be referred to.

COTTON PRICES RISE AND CLOSE STEADY

One Report Indicates Reduction of 14% in Acreage and 40% in Fertilizer.

CROP OF TEXAS OVERSOLD

Demand for the State's Product a Feature of Season—Grades Above the Average.

After a session of considerable irregularity the cotton market yesterday closed steady at a net advance of 3 to 5 points. Liverpool's early prices were much better than due, although later there was a moderate reaction on profit taking. The incentives for the improved undertone were furnished by some private reports on the early crop outlook and the prospects of more rain in Texas.

The Journal of Commerce issued its complete preliminary report indicating a reduction of 14 per cent. in acreage and a curtailment of about 40 per cent. in the use of fertilizer. The season was said to average one week late, with the cut in cotton acreage largely taken up by increased areas seeded to grain. The crop now is said to have a fair start, but is needing rain in the Eastern belt to cause the germination of seed. The report also stated that reliable estimates of the acreage at present were difficult to obtain.

Another private report was that of Miss Giles, who estimated the reduction in acreage at 16.6 per cent. compared with an indicated decrease of 20 per cent. as reported April 5. A. Norden & Co. issued a report at 11 o'clock forecasting a reduction of 15.1 per cent.

The spot situation remains quite strong. Perhaps the most remarkable development of this phenomenal season has been the demand for Texas cotton. The staple is unusually good and the grades are at least above the average of some recent years. Several Texas cotton men are of the opinion that the crop of their State has been oversold. In other words, more cotton has been sold out of Texas, guaranteed to be Texas cotton, than the State produced in last season's big crop. If these assertions are true, and the statements come from some of the best judges in the cotton trade, they represent a development that is almost without precedent.

The week-end figures were without particular influence. The into-sight for the week was placed at 195,218 bales against 113,956 bales last year. The total for the season thus far is 13,966,000 bales against 14,152,000 last year. Spinners' takings for the week were placed at 269,308 bales against 248,810 last year.

Southern spot markets as officially reported were unchanged, Houston 10 points decline. The local market for spot cotton was quiet, unchanged; 10.50c for middling upland. The range of contract prices, which closed steady, was as follows:

Series No. 9.

Greater Than These Railroads

The Pacific Gas and Electric Company has a greater volume of business than any of the following Railroads:

Kansas City Southern Central of Georgia
Maine Central
New York, Chicago & St. Louis
Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis
Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh
Wisconsin Central Colorado Southern

The Pacific Gas & Electric Company's gross business last year was $17,200,000, and it is known that the development of the Company's territory of thirty Counties has hardly begun.

The first preferred stock yields a high rate of return.

The physical value of the Company's property, and its stable earnings, make the first preferred stock a desirable investment.

You may receive from us a description of the Company's property, with particular reference to the first preferred stock.

BRANCHES

Broadway and Lispenard Street Broadway and 72nd Street

The Lincoln Trust Company has recently moved into its own new building on Madison Square, erected to accommodate its growing, thriving business.

Essentially a commercial bank, it offers facilities a merchant needs—and in addition pays interest on deposits at a rate determined to be fair to the depositor and itself.

If you require convenient and satisfactory banking facilities, write to or call on one of the officers and ask for a statement detailing resources and giving a list of Directors who direct—leading merchants, bankers and lawyers whose names are a guarantee of solidity.

TO THE HOLDERS OF

Two-Year Five Per Cent. Secured Gold Notes,

DUE MAY 1, 1915,

OF

Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company

The Board of Directors of the Railway Company has to-day declared effective the Extension Agreement dated April 14, 1915.

Holders of receipts for Notes deposited with May 1, 1915, coupon attached should present the same on or after May 1, 1915, to Central Trust Company of New York, 54 Wall Street, New York, for payment of the installment of interest then due on said Notes. Coupons for said installment of interest not deposited under the Extension Agreement should be presented for payment at the same time and place. Deposit receipts and coupons when presented should be accompanied by certificates of ownership as required by the Internal Revenue Department under the Federal Income Tax Law.

Holders of receipts upon surrender thereof to the Depositary will be entitled to receive Notes duly extended as in the Extension Agreement provided, to the face amount mentioned in the receipts, with the additional interest coupons annexed.

The time for further deposits has been extended to and including May 4th, 1915. Noteholders who have not already done so, should, in their own interest, deposit their Notes at once with CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, 54 WALL STREET, NEW YORK CITY, the depositary named in Extension Agreement, in order to secure the benefits thereof. The prompt cooperation of all Noteholders will facilitate the plans now being considered by the Directors which contemplate the payment of all extended Notes at or before maturity.

By order of the Board of Directors.

Secretary Redfield Discusses the War's Effect Before Scientists of the Nation.

PUTS SPUR TO BUSINESS

And Declares Leadership Is Beckoning—Great Tide of Immigration Predicted at Close of Hostilities.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 30.—Leaders in the financial, political, and scientific life of the nation who addressed sessions of the American Academy of Political and Social Science today asserted that America stood on the threshold of the greatest prosperity it ever had known.

The effect of the European war on America's industry, international trade, and neutrality were today's topics. The speakers included Alba B. Johnson, President of the Baldwin Locomotive Works; Henry Bruere, Chamberlain of New York City; Samuel Gompers, Frances A. Kellor, Vice Chairman of the Committee of Immigration of New York; Theodore Marburg, former Minister to Belgium; Secretary of Commerce Redfield, W. S. Kies, of the National City Bank of New York; Professor John Bassett Moore of Columbia University; Morgan Shuster, Albert Bushnell Hart and Paul Fuller.

Secretary Redfield, in his speech, predicted great commercial expansion for the United States as a result of the war. His subject was "America's International Trade as Affected by the European War." He reviewed commercial conditions in the world trade prior to the outbreak of the war, showing that Great Britain, Germany, and the United States ranked in the order named in competition for foreign business. He said that the United States, when hostilities began found itself unprepared to meet the situation, either financially or in a commercial way.

"It is not necessary," he said, "to review the history of the critical months of August and September last. We are concerned, however, chiefly to consider what the extraordinary change is which has come over the face of our foreign trade.

"A floating debt of perhaps four hundred million dollars has been paid in goods, and not in gold. Some of the gold we had exported to pay what we owed before the war has come back to us in pay for debts due us. It amounts since the first of December to over six hundred million dollars. We are saving money as a nation, at an astonishing rate. The nations of the world turn to us for cash. The nations turn to us, both belligerent and neutral, not only to furnish them goods but to loan them the money with which to pay for the foods they buy from us. We are lending the world money and we are selling the world goods, and both to such an extent that our foreign financial outlook and the condition of our export trade has taken on within ten months an entirely new significance. A new spirit has come into our commercial life—a new sense of relationship to others and of our power to help them and of our ability to supply them."

"It is doubtless risky," Secretary Redfield continued, "to foretell what the ultimate effects of the current war shall be upon our commerce. We know where we were before the war began—a great and growing competitor, of others who had many advantages over us. We know where we are now while the war goes on—the one great industrial and commercial country which is at peace and certain to remain so.

"Two factors will affect America favorably in the coming days. One is the loss of good-will by her competitors through enforced absence from business. The other is the injury to her competitors through broken or suspended organization. This is not all. The organization in many cases has been not only broken or suspended, but the units which composed it has been slain."

In summing up, Secretary Redfield said:

"It seems clear to me that if we do our part we shall change our place among the great competitors. The world is ever the economic gainer, in the last analysis, by war. The losses must be absorbed, and we must do our share of the absorbing, but in the process of absorption places relative to one another may be exchanged. No one, I think, would be surprised to find the United States second in the world's competition, nor, if the war shall long continue, be astonished to find her first. If we are willing to lay aside passion and prejudice, to look at things with an international instead of a parochial viewpoint, to realize that inefficiency is unpatriotic, if we are readyto give up inertia and take a step forward out of ourselves to help others; if those things can be done, I see no reason why we may not become the first among the world's great trading nations."

Theodore Price of New York in a discussion of finances estimated that the national debts of the belligerent nations and their political subdivisions would amount to $50,000,000,000 in case the war lasted until Aug. 1, and he predicted either a repudiation of debts or the issuance of irredeemable paper currency.

Henry Bruere in his speech advocated the establishment of a "vigorous national agency to provide facts, suggestions, and leadership making available to all America the experience of the world, or any community or industrial enterprise in America, in cambating the most iniquitous of all social evils, the economic ostracism we call unemployment." He asserted that it was not to the credit of the State and Federal Governments that cities had, to date, furnished leadership which these better equipped Governmental agencies had failed to supply. Through a Federal Bureau, he believed unemployment might be reduced to a minimum.

Samuel Gompers, in his address to the Convention, said that organized labor was planning to protect wage earners against a tide of immigration of unparalleled proportions, that undoubtedly would flow to this country at the conclusion of the war.

"To some of you," he said, "unemployment is a social and economic problem. To the worker, it is a personal experience, and six cent bread to the New Yorker of the East Side was a tragedy."

Three speakers at tonight's session of the Convention denied the justice of the German Ambassador's protest against the exportation of munitions of war to the Allies. "The prime right to keep up neutral trade with all belligerents in time of war is not conferred by the good nature of the belligerents," said Dr. Albert Bushell Hart, professor of government in Harvard University. "Cargoes of actual contraband are liable to capture anywhere on the high seas and the United States gives no protection to that trade. Interferences with neutral rights must stand on a positive addition to the military efficiency of some belligerent."

William C. Dennis of Washington, formerly Assistant Counsellor of the State Department, took the same view. Dr. Charles Noble Gregory of Washington advanced the argument that "nothing could be more impossible or confusing than to shift the rule of neutral obligations with the varying events and successes of war."

The formation of an incorporated trust which would enable its members to engage in successful competition for export trade against foreign manufacturers was proposed by W. S. Kies at tonight's session.

Mr. Kies said that a policy similar to that of Germany whereby the exporters and manufacturers are encouraged to combine, was the only one which would enable American business men to sell their goods abroad. He suggested the formation of a corporation under State charter.

Paul Fuller of New York, another speaker at tonight's session, asserted that the three-mile zone of sovereignty along American shores should be abandoned, in view of the development of modern guns, and that "there should be established a much-extended and thoroughly safe zone around the two Americas beyond which no belligerent should venture without incurring the peril of internment."

Dr. F. J. Warne of Washington took as his subject "The War and Immigration." He outlined a plan for the better regulation of immigration. Dr. Warne's plan provides for the creation by Federal legislation of such governmental machinery as will, in co-operation with State and private employment bureaus, give a measurement of the anticipated needs of American industries for rough, unskilled immigrant labor at the standard or American rate of wages. He predicted a flood of immigration after the war and one of the greatest industrial revivals this country ever has experienced.

EUROPE TO EXTEND TRADE.

Willard D. Straight Says We Will Not Gain Much.

MUSKOGEE, Okla., April 30.—A liberal policy by the Government in the improvement of rivers and harbors, "that the advantages of water transportation may be preserved by us to the fullest extent," was urged in a resolution adopted here to-day by the Southern Commercial Congress.

"Our people should be protected from the danger and damage which comes from such of our water courses as are under exclusive authority and control of the general Government, the resolution asserted.

It also asked that "to the end that our works for public defense, and of a civil and commercial character, may be of the highest degree of efficiency, they be separated and each be under specialists, such being the policy of every great government except our own, and the time having arrived when longer delay in the inauguration of a similar policy is opposed to public interest and safety."

Willard D. Straight of New York, member of J. P. Morgan & Co., and representative of the National Foreign Trade Council, told the Congress that with conditions bound to arise after the European war, negotiation of reciprocal trade arrangements should be facilitated, trade reprisals should be made possible, and that a tariff board might be found necessary.

"It is foolish," said he, "for us to talk complacently of capturing British and German trade because Europe is at war, and because the Monroe Doctrine is supposed to give some sort of hypnotic claim to the profits of South American commerce. Much of the business upon which we are now engaged is directly attributable to the war. Once the war is over, it will not be long before Europe, commercially and industrially better organized than before, will aggressively undertake to recoup itself for its losses by extending and developing its foreign trade."

Mr. Straight declared that when the war ends there may be a political reaction and financial and industrial depression throughout Europe. He said German foreign trade will be disorganized, the Russian market closed as far as possible to German goods, and British foreign trade may not flourish as before because capital will be required at home, for a time, at least. From the American point of view, he said, the most important result of the war will be the impetus to more effective national organization.

IMPORTS DROP AGAIN.

Those of Dry Goods Here Fell Off $1,000,000 Last Week.

General imports and dry goods, which are showing wide fluctuations from week to week at this port, declined considerably in the week ended April 24, according to the Custom House report made public yesterday. The week's inward movement totaled $18,817,808, compared with $20,348,603 in the week before, and $15,020,037 in the week before that. Dry goods fell off $1,000,000, compared with the previous week. Dyewood extract entries were the heaviest in any single week for months, with a value of $462,453, while argols ran heavily, totaling $133,074. Indigo was manifested at $13,767, and aniline colors at $4,768. No alizarine colors were reported.

Jewelry, precious stones, and watches were appraised at $273,097, while hides and findings had a value of $1,385,957, undressed hides being set down at $1,295,144. India rubber manufactures and waste totaled $2,986,853, while copper imports had a value of $457,794. Receipts of wool were unusually high, totaling $974,115. Coffee entries amounted to $1,254,652, while raw cocoa imports were placed at $424,657. Sugar imports were $4,904,053, or $1,000,000 more than in the preceding week. Fresh beef and cotton imports were small.

Dry goods entered for consumption totaled $1,385,397, silk entries being appraised at $393,173. The latter receipts were about half of those in the week before. In the preceding week the consumption entries of dry goods were valued at $2,377,219, and at $2,340,540 in the corresponding week last year. Withdrawals from bonded warehouses reached $606,634, while the amount warehoused totaled $374,329. Last year the amounts were, respectively, $636,472, and $950,138.

WANTS DIRECT LINE FROM HERE TO CHILE

Luis Izquierdo, Delegate to Pan-American Financial Conference Arrives.

SEEKS AMERICAN CAPITAL

Republics on West Coast Must Have Merchant Fleet of Their Own, He Believes

The first to arrive in this country of the three Chilean delegates to the Pan-American Financial Conference, to be held in Washington on May 24, is Luis Izquierdo, a former Minister of Foreign Affairs. He landed here yesterday from the United Fruit steamship Carrilo, via the Isthmus of Panama. He was met at Quarantine by Martin Fluhrer, representing the Collector of the Port; Lieutenant Henry P. Kraft, U. S. N., aide to Rear Admiral Usher, and Captain Halsted Dorey, U. S. A., aide to General Wood, who accompanied Mr. Fluhrer on the revenue cutter.

Augusto Villanueva, Director-General of the Bank of Chile, and Luis Aldunate, a banker, the two other delegates, are expected by a later steamship.

Mr. Izquierdo said that he hoped to interest American capitalists in shipping projects which will tend to develop the commerce of the West Coast of South America with the United States. The establishment of a direct line from New York to Valparaiso via the Panama Canal will be one of the subjects he will bring up at the conference. The Chilean merchants, he said, had realized the loss they had sustained financially in the withdrawal of European shipping from the Pacific, which had hampered the export of their produce.

"The republics on the West Coast must have a merchant fleet of their own," Mr. Izquierdo declared, "in order to be independent of the ships of European nations. Chile has felt the need of a merchant marine even more than the United States has. Had we not depended upon European nations to transport our produce, the severe financial crisis through which our people have been compelled to pass would not have occurred.

"It will be my endeavor to secure the co-operation of the people of the United States in building up a merchant marine that will safeguard us from any future disaster. The dominance of the seas must pass from the Eastern world to the Western world. We of the West have all that is needed to obtain such power. It only remains for us to set the machinery in motion. By co-operation, honest endeavor and perseverance we cannot fail to put up the flags of the countries of this hemisphere on the sea.

"I am in favor of a mutual subsidy. By that I mean both the United States and Chile, and possibly other South American nations, shall by financial aid assist in the establishment of direct steamship service between the West Coast of South America and United States ports.

"Let the United States and Chile start the movement in this manner. Then if other South American countries wish our ships to call at their ports, agreements may be made by which they bear their share of the burden.

"The immediate effect of the adoption of such a plan would be closer business and social relations between North and South America. At present Valparaiso is twenty-three days steaming from New York. We would cut that time down by placing speedier ships in service. We want American bankers to come to Chile."

Mr. Izquierdo was met at the pier by Martin Vogel, Assistant Treasurer of the United States in New York.

DEMAND FOR DRY GOODS.

Arrival of Warm Weather Proves a Stimulus to Trade.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 30.—Marshall Field & Co. in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

"The arrival of warm weather is proving a stimulus to the dry goods business. Retailers report a good demand for seasonable merchandise.

"Current wholesale distribution shows an increase over that of the corresponding period a year ago. Orders from our road salesmen as well as mail orders are somewhat heavier than during the same week last year, and the attendance of buyers in the market has been larger.

"Collections compare favorably with those of a year ago. Prices on domestic cotton cloths are firm."

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The wheat market yesterday was considerably agitated over the probable extent of May deliveries at Chicago, and as a whole the situation was looked upon as one of unusual obscurity regarding probable future developments. Prices for the old crop position continue to demand premiums of 26¾ points over July and 37 points over September. The statistical position is considered distinctly firm, and supplies of old crop wheat are becoming smaller every day. Europe is still buying the old crop, however, and it was said yesterday that sales on Thursday had been considerably larger than reported, and that a fair business was still being done. Nothwithstanding this demand, prices, after working up a little from an early decline, again sagged off, and at the close of the day were 1 to 1¾c net lower. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.70 and No. 2 hard at $1.71, cost, insurance and freight, track; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.64½, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.65, cost, insurance and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

Price changes in the corn market were small, the close being ⅛c to ⅝c net lower, and, in view of the decline in other grains, the undertone was considered steady. In the local cash market, No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 87¾c, prompt shipment.

OATS.

Prospects of liberal deliveries on May contracts at Chicago caused active liquidation in the oats market, and prices were easier, closing ¼c to ¾c net lower. The local cash market was easy, standard quoted at 61½c; No. 2 white, 62c; No. 3 white, 61c; No. 4 white, 60c; fancy clipped white, 63@64c; ordinary clipped white, 62@63c, all elevator.

COTTONSEED OIL.

Tenders on May contracts in the cottonseed oil market amounted to about 2,000 barrels. Prices during the day ruled steady, closing net unchanged to 2 points higher.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was firm and higher early in the day, with smaller offerings and a little better demand based on the firmness in the hog market, which seems to be working up toward the 8c mark, but late in the day values sagged off under May liquidation and in sympathy with grain. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 15,000, estimated for Saturday, 8,000; Kansas City received 3,500 and Omaha 7,800.

THE TARIFF ON FISH.

Test Cases Decided by the Board of General Appraisers.

The canned fish provisions of the present tariff act came in yesterday for the first judicial construction of the law. The cases forming the test before the Board of General Appraisers stood in the names of the Tokstad-Burger Company and Thomas Woodward & Son of this city, and Gustav Muller & Co., Chicago. The first of these consisted of fish, skinned and boned, packed in tin packages. It was classified as fish in tins, and returned for duty at 15 per cent. ad valorem. The protesting firm claimed a rate of three-fourths of 1 cent per pound as fish, skinned or boned. In finding against the importers Judge Brown said that Congress in the act of 1913 greatly simplified and shortened the previous fish schedule, and abolished the eo nomine provisions for particular kinds of fish, and grouped all fish under four distinct classes or heads.

This grouping, the General Appraiser pointed out, was by means of a series of graduations based primarily on the condition of advancement, the rate of duty increasing as the state of advancement increases, considering the package, the packing, and the preparation, all taken together. It was contended by the importers at the hearing that the provision for "fish skinned or boned," is more specific than the provision for "fish in tin packages," and therefore Congress must have intended to tax fish in tin packages, which were also fish skinned and boned, at a lower rate. Judge Brown disagreed, and held that the provision for "all other fish in tin packages, not specially provided for in this section" controls over that for "fish, skinned or boned."

The protest of Muller & Co. related to fish packed in oil in bottles and tins, while the Woodward importations covered British Columbia salmon salted and pickled in brine, imported in tierces, each containing eight or nine hundred pounds. Judge Brown reached the conclusion that both importations were properly assessed at the higher rate of duty, and accordingly confirmed the Custom House classifications. Although the board has been handing down a great number of decisions involving canned fish products imported under preceding tariffs, there are still several thousand of the old protests to be disposed of.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Augustus J. Phillips, merchandise manager and foreign and domestic dress goods and linen buyer for R. H. Macy & Co., has resigned his position to take effect July 1.

At a well-attended sale of women's wear held Thursday, the National Purchasing Company, 8 Lispenard Street, sold suits up to 80 per cent. and dresses at 75 per cent. of the original prices, showing that an active demand exists for this sort of merchandise.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

In Town.

SCOTMINTS CO., INC.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Scotmints Co., Inc., by three Cincinnati creditors. Marshall J. Root was President of the Scotmints Co., which is a Delaware corporation, incorporated on Nov. 14, 1914, with capital stock $250,000. Charles B. Van Nostrand, formerly a Wall Street broker, was Treasurer. The company made a peppermint confection.

WILLIAM H. GRILL, brass finisher, at 627 East 233d Street, the Bronx, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $6,221 to three creditors, and assets $800, a claim against the City of New York.

HENRY H. SIMPSON, salesman, of 967 Union Avenue, the Bronx, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $11,434 and assets $165.

SAMUEL ETKIN, tailor, at 1,235 Franklin Avenue, the Bronx, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $232 and no assets.

WILLIAM FRIEDLANDER, INC., tailor, at 107 William Street, has filed schedules showing liabilities $7,509 and assets $15,825, consisting of outstanding accounts $14,958, stock $750, fixtures $100, and cash in bank, $17.

Out of Town.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill.—Frederick Robinson Exhibition Co. Voluntary petition. Liabilities, $127,151; assets, $95,000. This company last year operated a number of attractions at Riverview Park, a Chicago amusement enterprise, including the "War of the Worlds," "The Sinking of the Titanic," "Pharaoh's Daughter," &c. Recently some of these attractions were removed to the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

National Operating Co. of Chicago. Involuntary petition in behalf of Henry W. Zeller and others. Zeller and his associates say they were induced to purchase $28,000 stock in the corporation on representations that it had purchased a controlling interest in the capital stock of the American Life Insurance Co. of Illinois. They declare they found this to be untrue.

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—The Alaska Fur Company, by its President, A. W. Hilliard, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy; liabilities of $19,000.86 are all unsecured with the exception of $55 of wage claims. Assets are given as $14,081.95.

Weekly Failure Report.

Bradstreet's reports 374 business failures in the United States during the week, against 411 for the previous week, and 285, 262, 224 and 284 for the corresponding weeks of 1914 and 1911. The Middle States had 140, New England 15, Southern 106, Western 61, Northwestern 16, and Far Western 36. Canada had 54, against 47 for the preceding week. About 88 per cent. of the total number of concerns failing had capital of $5,000 or less and 9 per cent. had from $5,000 to $20,000 capital.

The quotation is for six months' paper.

Separate Skirts Are Wanted.

The demand for separate skirts is keeping the manufacturers of this kind of apparel very busy. The skirts are made wide in accordance with the present dictate of fashion, and are obtainable in a number of different materials. Chief among these are taffetas, white corduroys and cloths on the ratine order. The outlook for skirts made of corduroy is especially promising since just the proper degree of stiffness necessary to give the skirt the correct flare is obtainable.

Speculation in Dyes.

An examination of the figures on dye imports shows no reason why there should be complaint of a scarcity. The situation is explained in this way. Certain houses and a number of outside speculators got busy when war was declared and bought up what they could, and have added to their stocks on every opportunity afforded them. The result is that some dyes cannot be purchased from regular sources, but must be secured from other holders at exorbitant rates. A woolen man said that for some time past now this has been the only way in which the desired coloring stuffs could be obtained.

Look for Amalgamation.

It would appear that the present controversy in the coat and suit trade on the question of the employer's right to discharge and other problems may bring about an amalgamation of the two organizations of manufacturers in that field. It has been pointed out that the only interest served by the two bodies remaining separate is that of the union, which can work one association against the other in event of trouble such as the present one. A man who is well posted on the situation believes that a united stand on the questions at issue would have much more weight with the union representatives than where there are two parties working apart.

Future of Wool Prices.

While the cutting-up trades in general are naturally inclined to believe that the months to come will see a softening in the prices asked for piece goods, there does not seem to be any good argument to back up this contention. Reports from the London wool sales show some minor declines, but these will not exert any effect on this season's operations. Factors in the market who believe, on the other hand, that top prices have not yet been reached, point to the level of woolen prices in England which is above the domestic market. Advances abroad, they say, are always followed by increases here, although the variation comes within a period of one or two months and not simultaneously.

Gabardines and Whipcords.

The dress goods market, taken generally, is rather quiet at present, a condition that held true for the week. Perhaps the only feature of operations is the way gabardines and whipcords are coming to the front. The cutters-up seem to be in the frame of mind to receive new fabrics favorably, and this probably explains the place whipcords now occupy in the demand. The poplin, brought out below a dollar by one of the leading corporation mills, is exciting some comment in the market, and it would appear that the cloth will meet a very favorable response from buyers. The situation in poplins, however, seems to be somewhat unsettled, although some factors regard it as more or less of a staple.

Why the Dress Demand Is Good.

Dress manufacturers agree in ascribing the brisk demand for merchandise to the "wearable" character of the styles this season. Extremes are out of fashion, and sensible models predominate. One manufacturer stated yesterday that not only have the sales of this month been up to those of last year, but the losses for the past three months have been made up. Many other manufacturers have the same thing to say. The big retail stores where the suit and dress departments are conducted separately, have been especially good buyers, since the brisk business in suits did not detract from pushing the sale of dresses at the same time. Taffetas, white crêpe de chine, and cottons are the materials in vogue.

Business on Summer Suitings.

The manufacturers of men's wear Summer suitings comprising mohair and cotton mixtures, and fabrics made of artificial silk, &c., are beginning to feel the effects of the recent spell of hot weather. Immediately after the hot wave orders were received from the cutters-up to ship goods on the books at once. In fact, there has been more activity in this line during the last week or so than in the whole two months previous. An interesting feature of trading in merchandise of this sort is the adaptation of materials that were formerly used only by the women's wear manufacturers. A cloth on the ratine order, for instance, has been a big seller and artificial silk fabrics are being ordered in fair sized quantities. Established brands are moving very briskly.

Gray Goods Market Quiet.

The gray goods market yesterday was quiet on staple goods, such as sheetings and printcloths, but fancies and specialties were active. Prices were firmly held all around by first hands, branded 56-60, 4-yard sheetings having sold at 5¼ cents during the day. Second-hand offers of printcloths were in the market. Thirty-nine-inch 68-72s were sold for immediate delivery by second hands for 4⅞ cents against 5 cents by first hands. It was reported that 38½-inch 64-60s were let out in a limited way by second hands at 4¼ cents for prompt shipment. Sales of 39-inch 80 squares were made for near-by delivery by first hands at 6⅝ cents. Quotations follow:

39-inch,	68-72s	5c	38½-inch,	60-48s	3⅝c
38½-inch,	64-64s	4⅝c	27-inch,	64-60s	3⅛c

Reserve Stocks Being Depleted.

The Custom House report on transactions at this port for April, to be issued in the next ten days, is expected to show that importers during the month made heavy inroads on goods stored in bonded warehouses. This movement, while partly explained by the Summer's approach and the putting into consumption of many lines of seasonable goods, also, in the view of customs officials, reflects the inability of handlers here to procure merchandise owing to the war's curtailing effects. This latter feature is further emphasized by the falling off during April of goods warehoused. Difficulty is being experienced in getting certain lines, and, when procured, they are put at once into consumption. Reserve stocks, as reflected by warehoused goods, are steadily being depleted. During April, the Government's revenues here were materially increased by the payment of duties on withdrawals.

Larger Operating Costs.

The action taken by one of the leading shirt manufacturing concerns in revising its prices downward for the Fall season, is regarded as a very significant one. This house stands for the best in the trade, and has maintained its prices when all but one or two other concerns have reduced their prices to meet the demand of the retailers for wider margins. The shirt trade has been undergoing a somewhat radical evolution, and the number of manufacturers who have been forced to sell their stocks at a sacrifice has resulted in more or less demoralized conditions. In the revision of prices downward, recognition is taken of the fact that during the past few years the mark up which retailers must make to insure operating costs and a small profit has increased to a very appreciable extent, and the only relief to be obtained is through the manufacturer making a compensating decrease in the price of his product.

BANKER MANDEL CONVICTED.

Accepted Deposit When He Knew His Banw Was Insolvent.

Adolf Mandel, second of six private bankers on the east side to be placed on trial as a result of the failure of the banks last Summer, was convicted yesterday before Justice Davis in the Criminal Term of the Supreme Court of accepting a deposit when he knew that the bank was insolvent. Mandel was found guilty after a trial that lasted three weeks. The jury was out thirty-five minutes.

The courtroom and the corridors of the Criminal Courts Building were crowded with depositors in the Mandel bank when the verdict was brought in, and they received the finding of the jury with cheers. Mandel will be sentenced on Tuesday.

When Mandel's bank was closed last August by State Superintendent of Banks Richards there were 15,000 depositors with total deposits of $2,100,000. During the trial Assistant District Attorney Wasservogel brought out the fact that Mandel lost $859,000 speculating in Wall Street. Depositors have received a 15 per cent. dividend.

Books of the bank, which were submitted in evidence by the District Attorney, showed that after the banking laws were changed in 1914 Mandel opened a new set of books, in which the values of real estate holdings were increased $900,000.

Mandel may get a sentence of one to five years. He is 56 years old and lived at 56 East Eighty-seventh Street.

THE CONDITION OF TRADE.

Commenting on the condition of trade and the business of the banks, Dun's Review says:

Each week strengthens confidence in a progressive revival of business activity, but the forward movement is, in many departments of trade, so slow, and there are so many cross influences at work, that some disappointment is felt that the advance is, on the whole, not more pronounced. That substantial progress is being made is clearly disclosed by the trade statistics and reports. Bank clearings are beginning to reveal small gains over last year, and while this favorable showing is a reflection largely of the effect of the recent speculative expansion upon the New York clearings, it is nevertheless an indication of the trend of business. The latest reports from the iron and steel trade reveal no big movement, but indicate that the recent improvement is more than holding its own.

Clearings through the banks this week at the leading cities in the United States amounted to $2,910,166,688, an increase of 1.1 per cent. as compared with the $2,878,467,464 of the same week last year and of 6 per cent. as contrasted with the $2,746,532,052 reported for the corresponding week in 1913. New York City again makes quite a satisfactory exhibit, the total at that centre being $1,938,810,780, as against $1,905,505,209 last year and $1,763,546,871 two years ago, showing gains respectively of 1.7 and 9.9 per cent.

Bradstreet's says:

Business continues to gain in vitality, the rate of improvement being of the gradual but steadily spreading type, with trades and sections heretofore backward falling in line. Distributive trade, benefited by Summer-like weather, has expanded; current shipments by jobbers of essential staples are quite satisfactory; confidence in the future, expressed at numerous points, is manifested in a stronger disposition to place conservative orders for future delivery; employment of labor is better, and war orders continue to attract attention and provide activity for a number of industries.

London's Wool Sale.

LONDON, April 30.—The offerings at the wool auction sales today amounted to 13,800 bales of miscellaneous grades. American, Russian and French buyers showed a preference for merinos. Prices were unchanged. Good wools were firm and the inferior grades slow.

STEVENS FUND COMPLETE.

Institute Pays All Its Debts and Has $1,000,000 Left.

The $1,385,000 which friends of Stevens Institute have been seeking has been gathered to the last cent, it was announced amid cheers yesterday by President Alexander G. Humphreys at a meeting of 200 campaign workers at the Machinery Club.

In the final rally yesterday $15,000 needed to bind contingent gifts was got by the addition of three members to a club of five, each contributing $5,000. Dr. Humphreys said that the indebtedness amounting to $385,000 had been paid just before the meeting, leaving the institute with a clean slate.

The $1,000,000 remaining will be spent on land and buildings. The Robert L. Stevens tract of seven acres adjoining Stevens Castle at Castle Point will be purchased for the college campus, as $00,000 will be spent for a gymnasium.

Among gifts received yesterday was one of $10,000 from Charles J. Harrah, President of the Midvale Steel Company. F. A. Muschenheim, Vice President of the Hotel Astor, announced that eighty-one members had joined a club, each member of which was to give $100.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Low pressure over the East has been attended by showers in the Middle Atlantic States and New England and in the region of the Great Lakes. Another area of low pressure that covers the Rocky Mountain and plateau region has been attended by unsettled weather and rain in those districts, and over the Plains States it has also caused snow in Idaho, Nebraska, Utah, and Northern Arizona, and high winds on the California Coast.

Temperatures have fallen over the greater part of the country, and readings now approximate normal in the region east of the Rocky Mountains, while in the westward they are decidedly below normal.

In the Atlantic States the weather will be generally fair Saturday and Sunday, except that there will be rains in New England. Over the Mississippi Valley, the Plains States, and the Rocky Mountain and plateau regions the weather will be unsettled Saturday and Sunday, with probably rains. In the region of the Great Lakes and the upper Ohio Valley and the West Gulf States the weather will be cloudy, but probably without rain during Saturday and Sunday.

No important temperature changes are indicated for any part of the country within the next forty-eight hours.

Winds for Saturday and Sunday along the North Atlantic Coast will be fresh east; Middle Atlantic Coast, light to moderate, variable; South Atlantic Coast, moderate south.

FORECASTS—TODAY AND SUNDAY.

Eastern New York—Cloudy Saturday. Sunday, probably fair.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair Saturday and Sunday.

New England—Showers Saturday. Sunday, partly cloudy.

Western New York—Partly cloudy Saturday and Sunday.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Builders Buy Plot of Eleven Lots on Washington Heights as Site for New Apartments—Another Big Deal in the West Bronx—Plans Filed for $500,000 Broadway Apartment.

One of the largest and most important recent deals in the lower Washington Heights section was reported yesterday by Richard Elliott, who sold for S. Liebmann & Sons a plot of eleven lots on the north side of 150th Street, 125 feet east of Broadway.

Harris and Albert Sokolski, the buyers, will break ground at once for the erection of two high class seven-story apartment houses.

The property, which has a frontage of 275 feet on the street, and a depth of 99.11, has not changed ownership in many years, it being a portion of an old English grant to General John Maunsall of the British Army.

Jumel Place Sale.

A plot 50 by 90½ at the east side of Jumel Place, north of 168th Street, has been sold by the Donovan estate to Joseph J. Snow. Hall J. How & Co. were the brokers.

Buyers for Harlem Flats.

The five-story flat at 212 West 105th Street, 25 by 100.11, near Broadway, has been sold by George Ranger for Colrun Construction Company, which recently acquired it in trade.

The five-story flat at 64 East 111th Street, 25 by 100.11, adjoining the southeast corner of Madison Avenue, has been purchased by Helen Hoertzer. J. P. Finneran was the broker.

Bronx-Brooklyn Deal.

The new one-story taxpayer building on the northwest corner of Bainbridge Avenue and 194th Street, 34.6 by 104 and irregular, has been sold by Alexander Grant for Daniel B. Freedman and Lawrence Davies to an investor. In part payment the sellers took a plot of sixteen lots on Ninth Avenue, between Fifty-second and Fifty-third Streets, Brooklyn. The plot fronts 200 feet on Ninth Avenue, 120 feet on Fifty-second Street, and 200 feet on Fifty-third Street.

Builder Buys Sixteen Bronx Lots.

Another large parcel adjacent to the Grand Boulevard and Concourse, one of the most active apartment house centres in the borough of the Bronx, was disposed of to a builder yesterday.

The sale involves the plot of sixteen lots located on the west side of Valentine Avenue, 76 feet south of 182d Street, and running through to Ryer Avenue.

The property fronts 200 feet on each avenue and has a similar depth. It was sold by Mary L. Crawford.

Bronx Borough.

The four-story flat at the southwest corner of Intervale Avenue and 169th Street, recently acquired by the West Side Construction Company, J. Axelrod, President, from the Peter Doelger Brewing Company, has been sold by Mr. Axelrod to an investor for all cash.

Kurz & Uren have sold for Thomas H. Roff the four four-story new-law tenements, being, respectively on the northeast corner of Mohegan Avenue and 181st Street, southeast corner of Mohegan Avenue and Hornaday Place, 866 Hornaday Place, and 865 East 181st Street, covering a plot 62 feet on 181st Street, 121 feet on Mohegan Avenue, and 130 feet on Hornaday Place.

Long Island.

A. Cantore has sold the four-story eight-family house at 455 Academy Street, Astoria, to Miss F. K. Anderson for Mr. McComek, also a two-family house at 66 Halsey Street to Frank Infande for D. Maskill, and a lot, 25 by 100, on Vernon Avenue, near Graham Avenue, to J. W. Ryan for K. F. Anderson.

The Mathews Building Company has sold the six-family flats, 370 Eleventh Avenue, Astoria, to William Miller and Charles J. Miller for $11,500.

Staten Island Sales.

Cornelius G. Kolff has sold for J. W. Hughes four lots at Oakwood Heights, Oakwood, within two blocks of the railroad, to Mrs. Caffuri.

The same broker also sold for the heirs of W. W. Crawford two lots on Liberty Avenue, near Hancock Street, Dongan Hills, S. I., to Carmena De Ross, who owns the adjoining property.

Westchester County.

L. J. Phillips & Co., in conjunction with E. Nelson Ehrhart, have sold for Joseph Brewster a tract of fourteen acres at the southwest corner of Westchester Avenue and West Purchase Street, at Purchase, town of Harrison, Westchester County; also for the estate of E. C. Haviland a tract of twenty acres adjoining to the west on Westchester Avenue. The combined property will shortly be improved, and a costly residence built.

Recent Buyers.

The newly formed Ashton Holding Company, Inc., Albert Orner, president, is the purchaser of the four five-story tenement houses at the north corner of Fifth Avenue and 101st Street, sold recently by the Irving Savings Institution.

Mrs. George Bruce-Brown is the buyer of the former Ladew private stable property at 161 East Sixty-ninth Street. Mrs. Brown is going to replace the stable with a fireproof garage, costing about $30,000.

Mortgage Loans Placed.

Eugene J. Busher has placed $3,000 at six per cent. for the Reville-Siesel Company on the vacant plot running through from Third to Park Avenue, 100 feet north of East 188th Street; also for the Cedar Construction Company, $43,000 at 5½ per cent. on the six-story building, 55x100, at 865 Melrose Avenue, and for Louisa P. Wagner, $7,000 at 5 per cent. on the northeast corner of 201st Street and Marion Avenue.

Monmouth Beach Club Leased.

Mrs. Anita Duchastel of Vancouver, British Columbia, has leased the Monmouth Beach Clubhouse and the Monmouth Beach swimming pool, together with the garage, stables, and other buildings in the Monmouth Beach Clubhouse property, to Mrs. Muriel Spencer Stadler, who will open the hotel for the season on May 30.

New $500,000 Broadway Apartment.

Plans have been filed for the construction of a twelve-story fireproof apartment house with stores on the northeast corner of Broadway and Eighty-eighth Street, for the Eighty-ninth Street Construction Corporation, Jacob Axelrod, President.

It will have a frontage of 100.8 feet on Broadway and 164.1 feet on the street. The facade will be of brick terra cotta and limestone. The cost has been placed at $500,000 by the architect, George Fred Pelham.

Flagg Estate Auction Today.

Today at 2 P. M., on the premises, Joseph P. Day will offer at absolute auction sale thirty-one lots belonging to the estate of Ethan Flagg, located on Walnut Street, Walnut Terrace, and Yonkers Avenue, Yonkers, N. Y., and the northwest corner of Walnut and Ash Streets.

Dwelling Leases.

N. Brigham Hall & William D. Bloodgood, Inc., leased for Clarence Houghton to George A. Freeman his residence at Shippan Point, Stamford, Conn.

S. S. Walstrum-Gordon & Forman have leased for Mrs. M. A. B. Van Orden the dwelling at 193 Highwood Avenue, Ridgewood, N. J., to Mrs. A. A. Gard.

The office of Frederick P. Collins has leased at Caldwell, N. J., dwelling to Leslie Gardner for Marie L. Bush; to Grace W. Lucas for Charles A. Matthews; to Harris Pepper for Samuel D. Hawk, and to Percival K. Long for L. J. Euvrard.

Slawson & Hobbs have leased for W. E. D. Stokes, to Mrs. E. Hale, the four-story high stoop dwelling, 242 West Seventy-sixth Street, for a term of years; also the four-story dwelling, 123 West Seventy-second Street, for Charles A. Miller, to J. B. Melville for a term of years.

Commercial Leases.

The Charles F. Noyes Company has leased space on the ground floor of the Woodbridge Building, 100 William Street, for the Phelps-Stokes estates, to Howie & Cain, metropolitan underwriting managers of the Hanover Fire Insurance Company. This lease completes the rental of the ground floor of the building.

Clarence Whitman & Co., Inc., cotton goods manufacturers and commission merchants, who have been located for the last twenty-five years in the Rothschild Building, northeast corner of West Broadway and Leonard Street, have renewed their lease for a further term of five years for the basement store and first floor at the Rothschild Building and five lofts in the building adjoining, from Feb. 1, 1916. Daniel Birdsell & Co. negotiated the lease. The building is owned by the estate of V. Henry Rothschild.

Sussman, Gibbs & Karlin leased for the Magrom Realty Company the commercial building on the southeast corner of Prospect Avenue and 162d Street to the Community Investing Company. The new lessees are now negotiating to sublet the ground floor for a large furniture concern which intends to move to the Bronx from its present downtown Manhattan location.

Christ. Schierloh has rented the store at 821 Ninth Avenue for Adam Stegier to the Reliable Grocery Company.

Real Estate Notes.

The former home of Thomas F. Ryan, at the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street, has been sold by interests associated with the City Investing Company, and will likely be replaced with another structure.

The property was known as the Minturn house, and is one of the largest parcels under single ownership in lower Fifth Avenue. It is valued at $660,000, and has a frontage of 103.1 feet on Fifth Avenue and 125 feet in the street.

A CAUTIOUS WITNESS

Called by Safford's Counsel, She Declines to Answer Most of Questions Put to Her.

HER DEFENSE IS INDICATED

She Describes Man She Accompanied to Plainfield, but Does Not Say He Was J. W. Osborne.

The defense in the case of Franklin D. Safford, charged with committing perjury when he identified James W. Osborne as the man he saw with Rae Tanzer in Plainfield, N. J., opened yesterday in the Federal District Court before Judge Hough. J. B. Engel, of Safford's counsel, told the jury that the innocence of the defendant would be proven in two ways, first by evidence showing that Safford told the truth when he identified Mr. Osborne, and second by evidence showing that, even if Safford's identification was not correct, he believed he was telling the truth when he testified.

"We will show you," Mr. Engel said, "through the mouth of Rae Tanzer herself that James W. Osborne knew her intimately. We will show you that Kitchen, the hotel proprietor, told a different story than the one he recited on the witness stand until circumstances arose to make him change. We will show you that the attitude of the defendant has all along been one of good faith. We will bring out that he received no money from Mr. Slade until after he had agreed to come to New York to testify and that the money he received was for living expenses."

Stood on Constitutional Rights.

As soon as Rae Tanzer, the first witness for the defense, took the stand she announced that by the advice of her lawyer she would refuse to answer questions, but later she consented to answer a few. Judge Hough instructed her that, as she herself was under indictment, she had the right to refuse to answer any question which she thought might injure her own case.

Benjamin Slade, one of Safford's counsel, asked Miss Tanzer in several different ways whether she had known James W. Osborne prior to her own arraignment for using the mails to defraud him and whether he was the man she knew as Oliver Osborne, but she declined to answer. She did say, however, that a picture of Mr. Osborne used by him in 1905 in his candidacy for the District Attorneyship "represented" to her the Oliver Osborne she had known. This picture was bought by Miss Tanzer last October from the American Press Association, Thirty-ninth Street and Seventh Avenue.

The picture shows Mr. Osborne without his habitual glasses and, according to many who have studied it, it is not a good likeness of Mr. Osborne at the present time.

The fact that Miss Tanzer testified that it "represented" Oliver Osborne to her led some to believe that her defense, when she shall be brought to trial, will be that the photograph resembled Oliver Osborne so much that when she bought it she thought the original, whom she knew to be James W. Osborne but whom she had never seen, must have been the man she knew. It was only later, she will maintain, according to report, that she obtained a good look at Mr. Osborne and realized that he was not Oliver.

The chief questions asked by Mr. Slade which Miss Tanzer declined to answer were:

"Did you ever see James W. Osborne prior to Commissioner Houghton's examination in your case?" "Did you make a statement to Mrs. Speilberg, wife of your counsel, regarding Mr. Osborne when you saw him in the hall since this trial began?" "How long have you known Mr. Osborne?" "Did you know James W. Osborne by some other name?"

Miss Tanzer told of meeting the man she knew as Oliver Osborne on Oct. 17, 1914, and of going to Plainfield with him on the next day. She said that she knew his voice, and then Mr. Slade asked her if she had recognized that voice when Mr. Osborne was testifying last Tuesday, but she declined to answer. She said, however, that when a man, now known to have been J. W. Osborne, telephoned her on Feb. 11 the voice did not "sound like Oliver's." When asked if the man who went to Plainfield with her had telephoned her on Feb. 11 she said yes, but she at once retracted this answer and declined to answer the question.

The three letters received by Miss Tanzer from Oliver Osborne were next introduced, and she said that two of them had been handed to her by a man "represented" by the 1905 picture of James W. Osborne. The other, she said, had been mailed to her. On the envelope of one of the letters handed to her were the words, "Answer soon, tomorrow." These words were written in pencil, and Miss Tanzer said that the man "represented" by the picture had written them in her presence. She added that the three words were not in the same handwriting as that of the letter itself.

The letter written by Rae Tanzer which James W Osborne said was turned over to him by Oliver Osborne when he made his only reported appearance since the Osborne-Tanzer case began, was next pu in evidence by the defense Miss Tanzer said she had written it and handed it to the man "represented" by the picture. The letter, Miss Tanzer said, was inclosed in an envelope addressed "Oliver Osborne, Private." This envelope has never been found, but the fact that Miss Tanzer admitted that it was addressed to Oliver Osborne, in the opinion of many, has nullified the charge made by David Slade that the letter was one of those sent by Miss Tanzer to James W. Osborne and that the envelope was destroyed because it was addressed to Mr. Osborne. The point was made among the spectators yesterday that if the envelope was addressed to Oliver Osborne it would obviously have been to Mr. Osborne's advantage to produce it.

When asked to describe the man she knew as Oliver Osborne, Miss Tanzer said:

"He was tall, well built, had blue eyes, was slightly bald with mixed gray hair, had large cheekbones and a broad chin, was very quick in his movements and dressed very nicely."

Before Miss Tanzer began to testify, Mr. Engel moved that the indictment against Safford be dismissed on the ground that the Government had failed to show any intent on his part to lie. Judge Hough denied the motion. Miss Tanzer was still testifying on direct examination when court adjourned until 10:30 this morning.

PATERSON, N. J., April 30.—Mild language was used by Billy Sunday today when he addressed a gathering of 800 men and women in the home of E. H. Wells at 100 South Mountain avenue, in Montclair's "millionaire district." "Ma" Sunday also spoke.

The evangelist said he had a great liking for material things. David, he said, was enormously wealthy, but still he found favor in the eyes of God.

"Solomon was so rich that he could have hired John D. Rockefeller for a chauffeur," said Sunday, "yet he loved God."

It was announced at the Wells home that Sunday would go to Montclair next Wednesday morning to deliver a sermon in the Montclair Theatre.

The afternoon crowd at the Tabernacle was about 3,500 and Sunday's sermon was on "The Feeding of the Five Thousand."

The evening service was more like a convention of high school "rooters" than a church meeting. Seats were reserved for 5,000 students from the schools of Paterson and nearby towns.

Sunday announced that he would attend a baseball game between the Paterson and Newton High School nine tomorrow morning and umpire several innings. He called on the audience to attend the game ad support the school boys.

Suday's appeal tonight met with excellent success, 568 trail hitters, almost a record number, coming forward. The grand total of trail hitters is now 6,947, and the campaign is closing its fourth week.

William T. Smith, 20 years old, a chauffeur, of 528 East 136th Street, the Bronx, was held in default of $5,000 bail in Newark yesterday by Judge Grice in the Criminal Court, charged with being a fugitive from justice. The house of Mrs. George T. Richards at Media, Penn., was entered by burglars on the morning of Feb. 13 and jewelry valued at $7,000 taken. In the specific charge against Smith the value of the jewelry taken by him is set at $4,728.

Smith was employed as butler in the house for some time, but left Mrs. Richards's employ on Feb. 9. According to John Cooney of Philadelphia, he and Smith went to the barn on the Richards place on the night of Feb. 12 and hid there till 3 o'clock in the morning. When Mrs. Richards had retired they entered the house and Cooney says they stole the jewelry.

Cooney was arrested several days ago while working as an orderly at the Pennsylvania State Hospital at Norristown. He made a confession, the police say, and he was brought to Newark to aid in finding Smith. Smith denies any part in the robbery.

FINDS SLAYER IS GAMBLER.

G. B. Stagg, Who Killed Watchman, Sentenced for Dice Game.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., April 30.—Garrett B. Stagg, a Paterson youth, who recently was acquitted here of murder, after having confessed the crime to Sheriff Robert N. Heath, was sentenced today to not less than two years nor more than three years in State prison at hard labor and to pay a fine of $1,000 on an indictment charging him with gambling, to which he pleaded not guilty.

The evidence of the gambling came out at the murder trial and was not disputed. Stagg and other employes of the American Paper Company engaged in a game of craps on last Christmas eve, Stagg losing his week's salary. He struck Louis Walters, the aged night watchman, on the head and robbed him. The blow caused death.

The acquittal on the murder charge was due, it is said, to the court's charge that Stagg was guilty of either murder in the first degree or not at all. Judge William M. Seufert sentenced him today.

FLOUR MADE THIEF TRAP.

Child's Footprints on Grocery Floor Led to Arrests.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J., April 30.—Joseph Fasakas and his 11-year-old son, Bela, of 781 South Main Street, were committed to jail today by Justice of the Peace Oliver Van Billiard on charges of robbing the grocery store of John T. Pursell over which they lived.

The store was entered early yesterday morning for the third time and the robbery was fastened on the boy by means of flour sprinkled on the floor by the merchant. When he got to the store yesterday, the grocer found the imprint of a child's foot in the flour and traced it to the Fasakas apartment on the floor above. When the boy was arrested he said his father put him through a transom and he then opened the door to let in Fasakas.

Left $1 to Pay for Suicide Gas.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., April 30.—Leaving a note in which was inclosed a dollar bill to pay for the gas used, Mrs. Elizabeth Heck, a widow committed suicide late last night at her home, 537 South Clinton Street, East Orange, by asphyxiation. She retired at 10 o'clock last night apparently in good spirits. A short time before she heard a neighbor play music and told Mrs. Arastena Wallenstein, a friend, that she felt like dancing again. She was 64 years old, and apparently was in good health.

IN NEW JERSEY.

HOBOKEN.—Three policemen hiding in the Hoboken meadows were rewarded after a long wait early yesterday morning by seeing two men armed with a spade dig up a lot of brass said to have been stolen from John Moller's foundry, 700 Madison Street, a few nights ago. The men were arrested, and said they were Otto Siebelkorn, 22, a metal spinner of 306 Hudson Street, Hoboken, and William Schmidt, 19 years, of 1,032 Willow Avenue. The brass was worth $1,000.

HOBOKEN.—George Hetzel, 17 years old, of 813 Willow Avenue, is in St. Mary's Hospital recovering from burns received when he accidentally dropped a lighted match into a can of gunpowder. He had been removing powder from cartridges found in the dumps at the foot of Eleventh Street.

JERSEY CITY.—On a charge of allowing his horse to starve to death Charles Bodine of 236 Newark Avenue was fined $100 yesterday by Judge John Warren in the First Criminal Court. Witnesses testified the horse chewed the boards of his manger and stall.

NEWARK.—Testifying in his own behalf, Simon P. Northrup, assistant title officer of the Fidelity Trust Company of Newark, denied on the witness stand yesterday before Justice Nelson Y. Dungan in the Supreme Court circuit that he had discharged Henry G. Dickensheets, a subordinate, for inattention to business because he had appeared as a witness in a law case.

HACKENSACK.—A woman burglar, wearing high-heeled shoes, is believed to have been responsible for the robbery at the home of B. M. Meade on Passaic Street last night, when four diamond rings, $10 in cash, and other valuables were taken. Footprints near the back window lead to this conclusion.

PHILLIPSBURG.—Search is being made by the local police for Milton Philips, 14 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Phillips of Bennett Street, who is wanted on a charge of stealing a horse, wagon, and set of harness from the stable of James Thomas. He disappeared immediately after the robbery. The father told Mayor Kneedler he wanted his son apprehended and sent to a reform school.

NEWTON.—Justice of the Peace Charles E. Olah of Franklin was placed in jail here yesterday on a charge of having embezzled $70 bail money given by George Buro, who was killed three weeks ago in a mine accident. It is charged that when Buro's widow attempted to collect the money from the Justice, he insisted upon proof of the man's death and the woman's relation to him.

METUCHEN.—Following the transferring to Scranton, Penn., by Bishop James A. McFaul, the Rev. Paul Csmiadia, rector of St. Stephen's Hungarian Catholic Church of South River, the Middlesex County Grand Jury yesterday refused to indict eighty-seven members of the congregation, who had been arrested on complaint of the priest, charged with criminal libel.

ESCAPE FROM BELLEVUE

ALL BUT ONE RECAPTURED

In pink pajamas, four drug users, two convicted of burglary and two convicted of having cocaine, stole from the narcotics ward in Bellevue Hospital, where they were prisoners, last night, into an adjoining washroom, broke a screen, climbed out of the window and down a fire escape, ran across the yard, scaled an eight-foot fence, and escaped into East Twenty-seventh Street. After a thorough search of the neighborhood by policemen, hospital attendants, and small boys, three of the men were soon caught, but the fourth remained at liberty.

The four who escaped were Anthony Coggi, a laborer, of 175 Baxter Street; Peter Pryor, a driver, of 1,181 Second Avenue; Harry Degnan, an elevator operator, of 349 East 193d Street, the Bronx, and Nicholas Colletti, a barber, of 250 West Thirty-sixth Street. Colletti was not caught. When last reported seen he was running west in Thirty-fourth Street.

The narcotics ward is on the second floor of the hospital. Its thirty-six prisoners are under charge of Policeman McVeagh of the East Thirty-fifth Street station. When his back was turned the four men slipped one at a time into the washroom, closing the door behind them. The window is covered only by a screen, which overhangs the fire escape.

The sight of four men clad in pajamas climbing over the fence surrounding the yard of the hospital was enough to send small boys, who say them, scurrying around to the office to report the escape, which was made at 7:30 o'clock, when about 400 persons were gathered about the hospital entrance to visit friends.

Two Hid in Tenement.

Coggi was seen to enter a tenement house at 204 East Twenty-sixth Street and was found there hiding in a washroom on the second floor. In the same house in a third floor rear apartment Pryor was found in hiding, although a woman who answered the knocks of the policemen denied that he was there.

As a truck rolled down First Avenue between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Streets Policeman Connell of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, saw Degnan in it, attempting to crawl under some blankets.

The three prisoners who returned said they had broken out of the hospital because they wanted heroin and knew where they could get it. Coggi and Colletti had been convicted of having narcotics, and Pryor and Degnan of burglary.

John Paul of 322 East 106th Street, formerly a pugilist known as "Kid" Carter, was shot in the right hip last night when he attempted to escape from Detective Duffy. He was recaptured and sent to Bellevue Hospital.

Detectives Duffy, Ross, and Enelman of Lieutenant Costigan's squad, went to 106th Street and Third Avenue and arrested Paul and Michael Bisigli of 230 East 107th Street for the alleged sale of cocaine. A man bumped Duffy, loosening his grip on Paul, who fled. As Duffy started to pursue, the interferer again got in his way, but Duffy shot the fugitive. The two other detectives captured the man charged with aiding in Paul's dash for freedom. This prisoner said that he was Luigi Copollo of 2,209 First Avenue.

Ex-Teacher a Drug Victim.

Miss Marion Clarke told in Special Sessions, Brooklyn, yesterday that the drug habit cost her her place as a teacher in a public school in Brooklyn, and that she was compelled to work in a cheap restaurant. On her story, Joseph Belsite, a druggist at 235 Gold Street, Brooklyn, was convicted of failing properly to record the sale of prescriptions containing narcotics. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 or serve ninety days in jail.

Karl Waznidski of 237 West Thirty-fifth Street, who was arrested carrying twelve hypodermic needles and two bottles of morphine, was sent by Magistrate Murphy in the Yorkville Court to the Metropolitan Hospital and held in $500 bail for Special Sessions.

George Bell of 64 West 133d Street and May Freeman of 219 West Twenty-eighth Street, both negroes, were held for Special Sessions by Magistrate Deuel in Jefferson Market Court. Detectives said that the two had sold opium in a flat in West Twenty-eighth Street.

Three men in a lunchroom in Forty-second Street, near Seventh Avenue, were arrested on the charge of possessing narcotics. They said they were George Harris of 331 West Forty-fifth Street, a newsdealer; John Bulkin of 1,392 Franklin Avenue, the Bronx, manager of a restaurant, and John Burney of the People's Lodging House in William Street.

Ruth Moore and V. Herbert, both of 219 West Twenty-eighth Street, and J. Vernon of 356 West Forty-first Street, were held for Special Sessions by Magistrate Deuel in Jefferson Market Court under the Boylan law.

A. Levy of 68 West 116th Street, Pasquale Greco of the Sylvan Hotel, 121st Street and Third Avenue, and E. Winergrado of 304 West 115th Street, charged with having narcotics, were discharged by Magistrate McQuade in Harlem Court. Philip Lewis of 35 Ludlow Street was held for examination on the charge.

FREED IN QUACK CASE.

Four Prisoners Discharged Because Commitments Were Defective.

Four of the men arrested in the recent raid on fraudulent doctors, and held for trial in Special Sessions, were discharged yesterday by Justice Hendrick of the Supreme Court. The prisoners were Leonard Landes and his three assistants, Andrew Ewing, Sidney Engelman, and Abraham Cooperman.

Moses H. Grossman, counsel for the men, obtained writs of habeas corpus. Deputy Assistant District Attorney Richter and George W. Whiteside, representing the County Medical Society, appeared in opposition. Justice Hendrick said he sustained the writs as the commitment was void, because it did not specify the charge upon which the men were held. If additional evidence against the men is discovered Justice Hendrick will hear it in chambers.

PORTWOOD

The action brought by D. Lawrence Weber, owner of the Johnson-Willard fight pictures, to test the constitutionality of the Federal statute which bars their being brought into this country was argued yesterday afternoon before United States District Court Judge Thomas C. Haight, in Newark. After hearing the argument of the case he announced that he would take it up Tuesday and would probably hand down a decision on that day. In the meantime he asked that counsel submit briefs.

When the case was called the court room was filled with movie stars, prize fighters and promoters of boxing, among the latter being Jack Curley, who staged the Willard-Johnson fight at Havana. Boxing Commissioner Frank S. O'Neil of New York, was also present. The Government was represented by Assistant United States District Attorney Joseph Bodine, and former United States Senator Charles A. Towne and Benjamin F. Spellman argued the case for Weber.

Deputy Collector of Customs Frederick S. Freed of the Port of Newark refused admission for the films. The action is directed against him.

Mr. Towne in his argument held that the law which was passed by Congress last year was unconstitutional in that Congress had not the right or power to make police laws for the States. He said "No matter how much we try to stretch our imaginations, the showing of pictures on a screen cannot be construed as commerce."

He held that the law was passed for the purpose of prohibiting the sale of fight pictures and the traffic in them, and that it said nothing of exhibiting pictures. Weber, he said, did not intend to sell the pictures or traffic in them, but to exhibit them under his own supervision.

Mr. Spellman said the pictures had cost more than $90,000, and that if they were not allowed to be shown here the total loss to the promoters would be more than a million dollars. He also urged a speedy decision by Judge Haight on the ground that the value of the films is depreciating day by day.

Assistant District Attorney Bodine said the law was passed by Congress long before the fight occurred, and that inasmuch as the law is on the statute books it should be enforced. He added that the law was passed to save the morals of the people of this country from being corrupted by pictures of prize fights.

The promoters of the fight, he asserted, speculated with the law when they took the pictures. They were familiar with the law against the pictures in this country, but they went ahead with their preparations and spent money which they realized they might lose entirely. He concluded by asking the court to take into consideration the moral as well as the financial status of the question.

EPISCOPAL REVIVAL PLAN.

Laymen to Confer on Means—Spectacular Methods Scouted.

Laymen of ninety-six Episcopal churches will hold ten laymen's conferences in May to study personal and organized work for laymen. Eight of these conferences will be held in New York and two in the diocese outside the city.

In some meetings speakers from the Laymen's Efficiency League will be heard on advances for Christian work somewhat on the lines of more efficient methods adopted in industry.

Speaking of religious revivals, one of these Episcopal laymen said yesterday:

"It is agreed that New York needs a revival of religion, and I wonder whether the revival that will accomplish most and last longest is not one that sets Christians to doing worth while things for God and other men. Is not personal service rather than tabernacle mass meetings the key to the problem? Would we need in that case to wait for a professional evangelist, and could we not utilize buildings already at hand? Would we not most surely get things done that now go undone, and revive such religion in men and women as will most surely stay revived? I merely ask the questions. I am sure Episcopal laymen stand ready to help New York and Christ's cause in all forms."

$18,900 TAX FOR 20 PUPILS.

Summer Residents of Long Beach, L. I., Face Big School Levy.

New Yorkers who have Summer homes at Long Beach, in Nassau County, received notices yesterday signed by Warren E. Burns, W. I. Kollisch, and J. C. Hammond, Trustees of the district school, saying that at the annual election next Tuesday a budget for next year, amounting to $18,985 would be submitted. It is reported that there are but twenty school pupils in the district, and at this rate it will cost about $900 a year for each pupil. It costs the City of New York about $150 a year for each pupil. Among the items to which great exception is taken is one of $3,400 for teachers.

The burden of this tax will fall chiefly on the owners of the Summer homes in the section, and they with scarcely an exception are not voters in the district. They maintain their voting residences in the city. Recently the voters of the district, who are mostly men who find employment on the estates there, voted to bond the district for $200,000 for streets and highways. There were fifty voters at the election, and the vote was unanimous.

AT A JUNGLE PARTY

Lions, Leopard, Cheetahs, and Black Ape at Lady Mackenzie's Jungle Dinner.

AFRICAN GLADE AS SETTING

Big "Kaffirs" in White Tunics Guard the Pets—Odd Dishes for a Company of Fifty.

Lady Grace Mackenzie, the huntress, gave a jungle dinner last night at Delmonico's. Among the fifty guests were explorers, hunters, naturalists, zoologists, newspaper men, two lion cubs, one leopold cub, two cheetahs, and a black ape; the quadrupeds being pets of Lady Mackenzie's which, it is said, habitually breakfast with her in her apartment at the Belnord, and are kept in the kitchen when callers drop in.

The pets were chained to leaches five or six feet long, and lay on small platforms scattered about the walls of the dining room. Palm trees had been erected in the corners and palm branches hung along the walls and strewn about the floor, so that the big table in the middle of the room had the appearance of being set in a glade of the African jungle, and the musicians who dispensed melody in one corner were sheltered behind a thicket of potted palms and other shrubbery. The black ape, which was what the late Artemus Ward called "an amoosin' little cuss," sported about in the hangings along the wall and furnished a source of innocent merriment to the diners.

As to the innocence of the lions, leopard and other cats there is room for doubt. Jack Hemment, the Brooklyn explorer and photographer—that is to say, he lives in Brooklyn and photographs African animals; he doesn't explore Brooklyn—Jack Hemment was able to do anything he pleased with them. He played with their claws, stuck his hand in their mouths, fingered their teeth, invited others to feel the roughness of their tongues, and in general established himself on such a friendly footing that before the evening was over the playful creatures seemed to think he was their best friend next to Lady Mackenzie.

Another guest, who tried to follow his example, got a love tap from one of the lion cubs which tore the shoulder of his dress coat right across and sent him back to the wardrobe for repairs.

The animals were guarded by several large black persons attired in white tunics. Closer inspection proved that the black was the effect of tights, burnt cork, and wigs, and that the imitation Kaffirs were not all that they seemed to be. Indeed, their familiarity with the animals was not so close as Mr. Hemment's. Another favorite of the menagerie was John Dunsmuire, who went over from Bustanoby's to sing a couple of songs. When he reached the chorus the lions joined in with prolonged yowls, and after he departed the leopard cub was seen stealthily practicing some of his dance steps.

These cubs, it appears, are the children of animals Lady Mackenzie has slaughtered on her travels. The young ones she carried off into captivity much as the Austrians are said to have taken back with them the school children of Belgrade. Moving pictures which Lady Mackenzie took on her last African expedition also were shown, and the hostess admitted that in the course of time she was going back for another trip through the jungles. The table was decorated with a huge lion's skin as a centrepiece, with bronze statuary ... Nomin Muru, rizral n'queshe fanguinal, mealies mets, Egyptian quail, tropical salad, and ice cream Jungle Land.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, one of the well-known naturalists invited, sent a telegram from Syracuse saying that he would be detained in that city indefinitely. Among the scientists and explorers who were on hand were L. E. Waring, Theodore Sturgis, E. M. Shelley, who was Lady Mackenzie's companion during the latter part of her expedition; E. M. Shelley, Jr., Miss Grace Shelley, Lewis Hopkins Rogers and Mrs. Rogers, W. A. Bruette, J. C. Hemment, Tracy Lewis, John O'Hara Cosgrave, and W. W. W. Roberts.

TO HONOR WIRELESS HEROES

To Dedicate Jack Philips Titanic Memorial Fountain May 12.

At a meeting yesterday afternoon in the Maritime Exchange, 78 Broad Street, plans were completed for the dedication of the Jack Philips Titanic memorial fountain at the base of the tower of the United State Barge Office at 3 P. M. on May 12.

President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen, who will then be acting Mayor, will receive the memorial on behalf of the city. It consists of a cenotaph shaft 8 feet high with seats on each side and a fountain in the centre, all of granite, and a background of cypress trees.

Among the forty-one members of the committee in charge of the work are J. P. Morgan, David T. Warden, Dock Commissioner R. A. C. Smith, P. A. S. Franklin, H. B. Walker, H. H. Raymond, and William Simmons, President of the Maritime Exchange.

The funds to erect the Philips Memorial were collected by the wireless operators on Atlantic and coastwise steamships on both oceans and amounted to more than $3,000. It is intended to have the names of all operators who have lost their lives while on duty inscribed on the cenotaph as a record of their bravery and to inspire others to emulate their example in the time of danger. The names that will be on the memorial when it is unveiled are:

George C. Eccels, Steamship Ohio, Aug. 26, 1909; Pacific Coast.
Stephen F. Sczepanek, Steamship Pere Marquette, Sept. 9, 1910; Lake Michigan.
Jack Philips, Steamship Titanic, April 15, 1912; Atlantic Coast.
Lawrence Prudhunt, Steamship Rosecrans, Jan. 17, 1913; Pacific Coast.
Donald Campbell Perkins, Steamship State of California, Aug. 18, 1913; Pacific Coast.
Adolph J. Svenson, Steamship Hanalei, Nov. 23, 1914; Pacific Coast.

Space is left for the addition of other names in the future.

INDICTED FOR DOYLE MURDER

Mangin Charged with Killing Official of Rival Union.

William F. Mangin, formerly Secretary and Treasurer of Local 449 of the Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers, was indicted yesterday, charged with the murder of Luke Doyle, a teamster, who was shot down in Washington Street and died a few hours later in a hospital. With Doyle's death secrets which it is believed might have cleared up the murder of Barnet Baff, the Washington Market poultry dealer, were left untold.

Following the dissolution of the union of which Mangin was an officer in January, he began the formation of a new union, but Doyle and Jeremiah Sullivan, who had been business agents for the old union, also started an organization. Doyle and Sullivan brought about a strike among the drivers of the Pittman Trucking Company. Mangin, according to information obtained by Assistant District Attorney Deuel, tried to fill the vacancies with men from his union, but Doyle effected a settlement before Mangin got his men to work. Doyle was just coming from a conference with officers of the trucking company when he was murdered.

... an income of $9,500 a year, a city home and a bungalow at Tampa, Fla., appeared through counsel before Justice Weeks of the Supreme Court yesterday, to oppose an application for alimony made by his wife, Ada Brown Ketchum, who is suing for a separation. Affidavits by Harding Rogers, Jr., a lawyer, and the Rev. Dr. Robert Bruce Clark, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Puritans, were submitted. Mrs. Ketchum had charged cruelty and neglect.

Mr. Ketchum denied all of these allegations, and said he had been the victim of a well-laid plan to get him to marry the plaintiff.

Mr. Bogers said in his affidavit that he introduced the plaintiff and de... and that a solution might be found for her in marrying some rich man. In September, at Greenwich, I introduced her to Mr. Ketchum. Later she asked, 'Why did you bring that dead fish to call upon me?'

Mr. Rogers recalled to the plaintiff her statement about marrying a rich man and told her:

"I brought a man who is no chauffeur but owns his own car. He is reputed to have an income of $10,000 a year; I think you could have him if you want him."

The Rev. Dr. Clark said the motives of the defendant in marrying were the "highest and best."

Justice Weeks gave $20 a week alimony to Mrs. Ketchum and $300 counsel fees.

PRINCIPAL PANEL OF THE DECORATIVE FRIEZE PAINTED FOR THE LEGISLATIVE LIBRARY, N. Y. STATE CAPITOL, BY WILL H. LOW, AND JUST PUT INTO POSITION.
The frieze consists of five panels, three on the eastern wall, two smaller panels on the northern and southern walls; and four allegorical figures as corner pieces. The panel above shows a young woman clothed in imperial purple, symbolical of the State. Mercury, on her right, offers the caduceus, the sign of commercial supremacy, while on the left she extends her hand and grasps that of Ceres, typical of the State's agricultural resources. Two figures of children, the one bearing the horn of plenty, the other the strong box of the treasury, complete the central panel.

THE RIGHT PANEL, EASTERN WALL
The aboriginal settlement of the country is depicted by an Indian youth who advances, proffering the pipe of peace, while in the canoe the trophies of the chase are heaped, and a second Indian holds aloft a wild turkey. In the stern of the canoe a woman and child look anxiously forward to the welcome awarded their offerings. The artist uses the opportunity to introduce the headwaters of the Hudson.

THE LEFT PANEL, EASTERN WALL

THE SOUTHERN PANEL, IN WHICH THE FIGURE OF LABOR IS SEEN SEATED BETWEEN THE FIGURES OF MANUFACTURES AND TRANSPORTATION, AND IN THE BACKGROUND A COMPREHENSIVE VIEW OF THE CITY OF ALBANY APPEARS.

The pure lustrous silk of Kayser Gloves immediately suggests the lustre of pearls

The correct glove for traveling is the Queen Elizabeth style in sand, putty, pongee or smoke

The silk in Kayser Silk Gloves is the reason for their lasting

More women wear them than all other silk gloves combined. Millions of women and twelve thousand dealers prefer Kayser Silk Gloves not merely because they are the best-known gloves in Europe and America but because they have found out from actual experience that:

Kayser Silk Gloves wear so much better The very foundation of Kayser Gloves—the Kayser Silk—is pure and strong. Fine workmanship alone could not make Kayser Gloves wear longer if the silk itself were not right. In 30 years of silk spinning, we have learned how to make use of a heavier pure silk thread (no weighting) without interfering with the delightful coolness of the gloves. You therefore get a silkier glove but not a heavier glove. This makes Kayser Silk Gloves wear so much longer that millions of women have learned that the one thing to look for in a silk glove is the trade-mark "Kayser."

Modeled perfectly, they heighten the beauty of the hand and arm Notice especially the shape of Kayser Silk Gloves, and how gracefully they fit the hand. The beauty of their appearance lasts, because the purity and strength of the Kayser Silk resist stretching. Even after they have been washed their lustre and fit are unimpaired.

Kayser Silk Gloves cost no more than the ordinary kind: two clasp are always 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25 and up; twelve and sixteen button lengths are always 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 and up. The name "Kayser" is always in the hem and with each pair is a guarantee ticket that the tips will outwear the gloves.

How to rouse a sluggish skin

A dull, sallow, lifeless complexion has several causes. Whatever the cause in your case, your skin needs stimulating. The following treatment is the most effective you can use:

Just before retiring, wash your face and neck with plenty of Woodbury's Facial Soap and hot water. If your skin has been badly neglected, rub a generous lather thoroughly into the pores using an upward and outward motion, until the skin feels somewhat sensitive. After this, rinse well in warm, then in cold water. Then rub your skin for five minutes with a lump of ice and dry carefully.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of an authority on the skin and its needs. This treatment with it cleanses the pores, brings the blood to the face and stimulates the fine muscular fibres of the skin. You can feel the difference the first time you use it—a promise of that lovelier complexion which the steady use of Woodbury's always brings.

Do this today! A 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment. Go to your druggist or toilet counter today and get a cake. Begin at once to get the benefits of this treatment for your skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is for sale by every dealer and druggist in greater New York and, in fact, by dealers everywhere throughout the United States and Canada. Made by The Andrew Jergens Co., New York and Cincinnati.

AUTOMATIC COOKING
Saves hours of time and work

Send Today for this helpful book

It is written by Mrs. Christine Frederick, the well-known authority on all matters relating to the kitchen and the home.

She knows the housewife's hardest task is cooking three meals a day, 365 days in the year. Nearly three-quarters of the average woman's time is spent in the kitchen.

In this 72-page, handsomely bound book, Mrs. Frederick shows how automatic cooking saves a large proportion of that time.

Sentinel Automatic Cook Stove

4 Models—For Any Kitchen—4 Prices

You can cook a complete meal on the Sentinel without watching it or giving it any attention whatever.

Just place the food in the automatic oven, set the timer and light the burner. Then you can leave the kitchen and not return until it is time to serve the meal. You will find it perfectly cooked—ready to put on the table.

You can prepare the meal hours in advance and go shopping or visiting while it is cooking—or you can read, sew, or busy yourself with other household duties.

No extra work of any kind is required—no pre-heating of food or heating of radiating stones. The Sentinel gives you all the advantages of a regular gas range plus the wonderful convenience of its automatic cooking feature.

Write now for "Meals That Cook Themselves." It is free.

FOR THE DEAF

The
"Lorgnette" Does Away with Trappings.

Why not hear gracefully instead of wearing headbands, cords, transmitters and batteries which disfigure your costume and call attention to your deafness.

The "Lorgnette," the newest of hearing instruments, is made in one piece with battery in the handle. No plugs, no broken connections, to annoy you. Can be used on either ear and is always ready for use.

We'll remodel your old style instrument into a graceful "Lorgnette," if possible. If not we'll make you a liberal allowance on it in exchange. Test the "Lorgnette" at our office. It is guaranteed for ten years.

This Refrigerator Went Thru the Fire which recently destroyed the entire kitchen of The Lunch Club, 17 Broad St., New York:

Saturday Morning—150 lbs. of Ice placed in the ice chamber.

Saturday Night the Fire Occured. See how the woodwork has been burned and charred almost into the insulation.

Sunday Afternoon—95 lbs. of Ice still left in the Refrigerator after the firemen had hauled it out of the ruins!

Incidentally, does this Save Ice?

Of course, it is a

Bohn Syphon Refrigerator

which is MADE TO RESIST HEAT. After the fire the food, bottles, ice, etc., were unhurt, and the PORCELAIN LINING WAS AS GOOD AS EVER! Just look at it—

It's the wonderful "FLAXLINUM" insulation in the BOHN which makes such a result possible—the greatest heat-resisting insulation ever put into a Refrigerator!

The "Flaxlinum" insulation and the Bohn Syphon System of rapidly circulating pure, cold, dry air, have caused the railroads, dining car companies, fresh meat and fruit express lines to adopt the Bohn Refrigerator system, to the practical exclusion of all others. Not a pound of fresh meat nor a box of California fruit comes into this market except in Bohn Refrigerator cars. Don't the car builders, the meat packers and fruit shippers know about refrigerating systems?

Call in and see this burned Refrigerator, and look at our large line in both wood and white porcelain. Some of the best styles are now marked at attractive prices. We can sell you a real refrigerator as low as $16. If you cannot call, write for our handsome catalog.

CHINA REJECTS PART OF JAPAN'S DEMANDS

Won't Grant Group V., Which Permits Japanese Supervision of Republic's Affairs.

TO APPEAL TO THE POWERS

Will Be China's Next Move if Japan Presents an Ultimatum or Encroaches on Further Territory.

PEKING, Sunday, May 2.—China has replied to the Japanese demands in a note which, while complying with some of the demands, definitely refuses to accede to others, including the most important, embodied in what is known as Group V.

China furnished to the Japanese Minister, Eki Hioki, a list of further concessions she was willing to grant. After perusing the note and the list M. Hioki declared that China was far from complying with the twenty-four demands presented by his Government.

This action was taken after President Yuan Shih-kai had thoroughly discussed the entire situation with the members of his Cabinet and his advisers since last Monday. The Chinese plenipotentiaries met the Japanese plenipotentiaries by arrangement yesterday (Saturday) at the Foreign Office and presented China's reply, which, in substance, refuses the so-called general demands of Japan.

M. Hioki asked whether these were China's maximum concessions, and then whether he should cable his Government. Lu Cheng-Hsiang, the Chinese Foreign Minister, replied that these were China's maximum concessions and that the Japanese Minister could so inform his Government.

The conference terminated with neither the Japanese nor the Chinese asking for another meeting. Should the Japanese Government now present an ultimatum or occupy further territory in China, it is intimated that the Chinese probably would appeal to the four powers which are pledged to China's independence.

Tsing-tao Offer Withdrawn.

On perceiving that the Chinese reply failed to agree to the demands of his Government, the Japanese Minister declared the withdrawal of Japan's proposal to return to China, Tsing-tao, which was conditioned on China's deferring no longer the acceptance of Japan's demands.

The Chinese note briefly recites the history of the negotiations. It denies Japan's charge that China has displayed procrastination and delayed the conferences by disputing various points, and also the charges of Chinese insincerity and unfriendliness. It further denies that China is conducting a newspaper campaign abroad. These were the reasons the Japanese plenipotentiaries gave for presenting their latest list of twenty-four demands, as a preliminary to an ultimatum.

The list of concessions is in the nature of counter-proposals. China asks the right to participate in an international conference in which the altered status of Shantung will be rearranged; indemnity for the losses incurred in consequence of the Tsing-tao campaign, and also restoration of its status as before the war. These three requests are repeated from China's original counter-proposals.

China offers further concessions with respect to Manchuria, almost meeting the Japanese demands. China accedes to three of the four demands regarding Mongolia, namely, the opening of treaty ports, preference in railway loans, and the non-pledging of local taxes. The agricultural demand is rejected.

Respecting the Hany Enping Company, China agrees that, pending the eventual formation of a Chino-Japanese company, the Government cannot make the company State-owned or borrow foreign capital for the repayment of the Japanese loan. The Chinese understand that this is acceptable to Japan.

Rejection of Group V.

China rejects the fifth group, with the exception of the modified Fukien demand, offering in this connection a separate note intended to meet Japan's wishes by pledging that no foreigners shall receive coastal concessions or contracts without Japan's consent.

Group V. comprises seven articles relating to the employment by China of Japanese as advisers in political, financial, and military affairs; supervision of the Chinese police; the right of Japanese ownership of land; Japanese supervision over the manufacture or purchase by China of munitions of war, various railway and mining rights, and the right by Japanese to propagate Buddhism in China.

Lu Cheng-Hsiang informed M. Hioki at the conference yesterday that the quotations embodied in Japan's revised demands were composed of words and statements of which he had made use in the course of his explanations as to why China could not consider Group V, the Japanese Minister having requested such explanations. Lu Cheng-Hsiang added that, as a fundamental misunderstanding existed, the plenipotentiaries had better say nothing further concerning Group V.

M. Hioki made inquiry regarding the absence of railway concessions, to which the Chinese Foreign Minister replied that China's good faith was at stake, as she had already granted definite concessions to another power.

MAY LEAD TO COMPROMISES.

Outcome of Japanese-Chinese Negotiations That Washington Expects.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Rejection by China of the "general group" of the Japanese demands occasioned little surprise in official quarters here. While the railway and mining concessions sought, pertaining directly to certain local sections of China, in which the Japanese are endeavoring to establish a sphere of influence, have been regarded as not difficult of adjustment, the articles in Group V have been looked upon since the beginning by the Chinese as the most vital to the maintenance of the territorial integrity and sovereignty of China.

It was recalled today that China early in February practically rejected the same demands by refusing to discuss them, even in principle. Their reappearance in a modified form was believed by the Japanese to offer a basis for compromise, but China's action today indicates her unwillingness to admit the articles to discussion even under modification.

Observers here familiar with Far Eastern affairs did not believe that a crisis had been reached, but that, with the expression by each side in the negotiations of its extreme position, the way would be opened for compromises. In this respect it was thought possible that Japan might yield some points in Group V, re-

TEAM BACKS OVER CLIFF.

Driver Fatally Hurt by 75-Foot Fall, but Horses Are Uninjured.

Persons in Riverside Drive near 168th Street, stopped yesterday afternoon to watch the filling in of the shore front, seventy-five feet below, with dirt and rock dumped down the side of the steep cliff from carts which backed perilously close to the end of the street. Many saw Vittorio Lombardi of 276 East 153d Street, the Bronx, back his team to the cliff's edge and prepare to dump his load.

The ground gave beneath his rear wheels. The heavy dump cart started to settle, and the crowd saw fear rush over Lombardi's face as he yelled to his horses and belabored them with his whip. The watchers saw the animals strain into their collars, saw the driver exerting every art he knew to encourage them, and, at the same time, saw the big wagon continue to settle back.

Men sprang for the heads of the horses, but before anyone reached them the animals had given way to the strain. The wagon toppled over the edge, dragging the horses after it, and Lombardi, shrieking with fright, went sliding down the incline toward the river.

Men and women, running tothe edge of the cliff, watched the wagon with its struggling horse, Lombardi still clinging to the driver's seat, go slipping downward. Then thhey saw the traces break and the wagon, freed of the dragging weight of the horses, go turning over and over to the bottom of the cliff, the horsees kicking and struggling and sliding along behind.

Lombardi was tossed from his seat and fell clear of the wreck of the wagon, its load of dirt and stone and the horses, but he lay where he had fallen, and from the street above other laborers were seen to pick him up and carry him, senseless, up the steep incline to the sidewalk.

Dr. Gluckstein, who came from Washington Heights Hospital, hurried Lombardi to the hospital, saying he probably would die as he had a compound fracture of the skull. The horses were caught and led up the bank. They were found to be badly scratched, but no bones were broken, and a veterinary said they would be all right after a rest.

UTOPIA FOR COLORADO.

Hiram Vrooman and Others in Big Industrial Experiment.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Colo., May 1.—The Industrial Utopia—Industrial City near Walden, Colo., in North Park, where, if the plans of a number of Eastern and Colorado philanthropists are carried out, each man will receive the full product of his toil, is soon to become an accomplished fact, and Colorado will be the scene of one of the most interesting sociological experiments in the history of the world, according to the Rev. Hiram Vrooman, formerly of New York City.

The site for the proposed city has been plotted into building lots, 2,500 acres of land has been purchased in the North Park country water rights obtained, and tweytn miles of canals have been constructed. A coal mine, employing seven men at present, is now in actual operation within four miles of the agricultural land, and 1,000 acres of the latter is being put under cultivation.

The organization has also purchased a 3,000-acre ranch in Sedgwick County, and has established a Summer resort and Summer school at Crystola near Pikes Peak, where Industrial Democracy will be taught.

Identified with the enterprise are Carl S. Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture; Benjamin O. Flower of Boston, founder of the Arena; John Barnd, a banker who is president of the Industrial City Company; David Rosenheim, a Chicago business man; George F. Washburn, Boston financier; Louisa Bohmer, St. Louis business woman; James E. Young, a Boston attorney; Charles O. Boring of Chicago; Arthur E. Harris of Boston, an artist, and several local men of prominence.

SUE ON LANKFORD'S DEATH.

Executors of His Estate Want $15,000 from Accident Insurance Co.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCESS ANNE, Md., May 1.—Whether Richard D. Lankford, who lived in New York, committed suicide or was killed accidentally will be decided in a suit just entered by his executors against the General Accident Fire and Life Insurance Company to recover on an accident policy for $15,000. The insprance company refused to pay the amount, claiming there had been no accident.

Lankford was Secretary and Vice President of the Southern Railway. His sudden death two days before he was to marry Miss Nellie Patterson of Brooklyn has never been fully explained. His body was found on Jan. 15, 1914, in the bathroom in his apartments at 1,140 Pacific Street, Brooklyn. Gas was flowing from a jet which was turned on. A Coroner's Jury decided death was accidental.

At the time of his death no mtoive for suicide was found. Lankford's finalcial and business circumstances were excellent; at the age of 46 he had risen to a position of prominence in the railroad world; he was in the best of health, and he was happy, witnesses said, because of the nearness of his wedding day.

All other companies in which Mr. Lankford held policies paid without question.

RUNAWAY AUTO KILLS MAN.

Truck Crashes Into Wall on Which Workmen Sat—Another Hurt.

A heavy automobile truck of an express company driven by Peter Larkin of 206 East Seventieth Street, crashed into a wall on the west side of the new park at Tenth Avenue and Eighteenth Street yesterday afternoon, killing John McNally, 35 years old, a longshoreman, of 324 West Twenty-first Street. Kerm Dambrick, 33 years old, another longshoreman, of 416 West Twenty-first Street, who was sitting on the wall with McNally eating his lunch, sustained a broken leg and severe injuries to his chest. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

The wall surrounded a piece of property that the Chelsea Improvement Association had just acquired and converted into a park and playground, and the official opening was to have taken place this afternoon. On account of the accident the ceremony was postponed until next Saturday.

An accident to the steering gear of the truck was responsible for the accident. According to Larkin, who was not arrested, McNally was pinioned between the side of the truck and the wall, the truck crushing his head and chest. Patrolman Fellman of the West Twentieth Street Station summoned Dr. Huddleson of the Hudson Street Hospital. Policemen and witnesses assisted in pushing the truck back, but McNally was dead before he was extricated.

RAE TANZER SWEARS JAMES W. IS 'OLIVER'

As Witness at Safford Perjury Trial She Insists There Is Only One Osborne.

DENIES HER RECANTATION

Girl Specifies Days on Which She Saw Wooer—Conflicts with Sister's Testimony.

After spending parts of two days in the witness chair and consistently refusing to identify James W. Osborne as the man she knew as Oliver Osborne, Rae Tanzer startled the occupants of Judge Hough's Federal courtroom yesterday by suddenly asserting that James W. Osborne and the Oliver of her acquaintance were the same person. Immediately after she left the stand her older sister, Dora Tanzer, swore that the identification was correct. The sisters were testifying in defense of Franklin D. Safford, charged with committing perjury in making the same identification at Rae Tanzer's examination for using the mails to defraud Mr. Osborne.

By identifying Mr. Osborne as Oliver, Miss Tanzer repudiated the sworn statement she made to Assistant District Attorneys Wood and Hershenstein, in which she admitted that she made a mistake in attacking James W. Osborne as Oliver. She has now, therefore, three sworn statements on record, two identifying James W. Osborne as Oliver Osborne and another distinguishing the two. Her first identification was contained in her complaint in the breach-of-promise suit for $50,000 which she brought against Mr. Osborne but abandoned.

Miss Tanzer's reversion to her original statement came dramatically near the end of her cross-examination by Mr. Wood. She was on the stand under direct examination by Benjamin Slade when court opened, and, although she repeated her testimony of Friday that a 1905 picture of James W. Osborne "represented" Oliver to her, she flatly refused to answer any question that sought a positive identification of Mr. Osborne.

Accuses James W. Osborne.

After she had specified on cross-examination every day on which she met Oliver Osborne and after she had testified that she once saw James W. Osborne leaving his office at 115 Broadway, Mr. Wood, speaking in a loud voice, said:

"Now, Miss Tanzer, is the man you saw coming out of 115 Broadway the same man who was running around with you on these days?"

"Yes," answered the witness clearly.

"Stand up, Mr. Osborne," Mr. Wood said, and Mr. Osborne, who was seated near by arose. Mr. Wood continued:

"Miss Tanzer, is that the man you were running around with?"

"Yes, that's the man," said Miss Tanzer.

Mr. Wood asked Miss Tanzer if she had not made a statement to the United States District Attorney's office, and if she had not made that statement freely and voluntarily. She admitted that such were the facts, but to emphasize his point Mr. Wood read extracts from the statement in which Miss Tanzer repeatedly said that she wished to talk freely and voluntarily. In the beginning of the statement Miss Tanzer had asked to see Mr. Osborne and Mr. Wood had refused to let her do so, saying that she was not called upon to make any statement, and that if there was any doubt in her mind about Mr. Osborne's identity she could say so. Miss Tanzer consented to make the statement, however, and, as she admitted yesterday, she answered "Yes" when Mr. Wood asked, "Are you quite sure that James W. Osborne is not the man you knew?"

All this Mr. Wood read to the jury, and to impeach the witness further he obtained from her the admission that, although she had written to Mr. Osborne that she had seen him at the Sherman Square Hotel and in the Surrogate's Court in Brooklyn, she had not seen him at either place. The witness was very anxious to give her explanation of why she had so written to Mr. Osborne and of why she had made the statement she contradicted yesterday, but Judge Hough ruled that her explanations were not permissible as evidence in the case of Safford.

"Represented" Her Wooer.

In direct examination Miss Tanzer told of meeting Oliver Osborne for the first time on Oct. 17, 1914, and of going to the Hotel Kensington in Plainfield, N. J., with him on the day following. Until that occasion, she said, she had been a good girl. After telling of going to several restaurants and other places with Oliver Osborne subsequently Miss Tanzer reiterated that the photograph of James W. Osborne "represented" her companion. She also testified that, after she had written several letters to James W. Osborne, two men went to see her at her place of business, who said they came from Mr. Osborne and that one of them carried a letter which has been made public as the one delivered to James W. Osborne by Oliver Osborne.

On a previous occasion Mr. Osborne admitted sending two men to see Miss Tanzer after he had received several letters from her which he did not understand, but he denied that they carried the letter which he said Oliver Osborne delivered to him after his emissaries went to see Miss Tanzer.

When Mr. Wood asked Miss Tanzer to specify each day on which she saw Oliver Osborne she named Oct. 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24, 29, 30, Nov. 29, 30, Dec. 1, 3, 4, 5, and 24. She also described Oliver Osborne as she described him yesterday, and when she mentioned that he had blue eyes Mr. Wood made her repeat the statement, which she altered to the extent of saying that he had "light blue eyes." It was generally remarked among Mr. Osborne's friends in the courtroom that his eyes were a decided brown.

Miss Dora Tanzer followed her sister to the stand, and although she pleaded that because she herself was under indictment, her lawyer had advised her not to say whether James W. Osborne and Oliver were the same, she several times involuntarily identified them in answering Benjamin Slade's questions. And on cross-examination she unreservedly made the identification as her sister had done. Asked to describe Oliver's eyes, she said they were "bluish-grayish."

Discrepancy in Dates.

When testifying at Rae Tanzer's examination before Commissioner Houghton, Dora Tanzer said that in the week before Thanksgiving Oliver Osborne had promised her a turkey, given a ring to Rae, and eaten a meal in the Tanzer home. With a memorandum before him of Rae Tanzer's statement of the days on which she saw Oliver, showing that he had not been to the Tanzer home in the week before Thanksgiving, Mr. Wood questioned the witness regarding this testimony. She said that she had made a mistake at the examination, confusing November with December, and Thanksgiving with Christmas, and that it was "some time, a couple of days," before Christmas that Oliver had done the things mentioned. According to Rae Tanzer's statement she did not see Oliver from Dec. 5 until Dec. 24.

Safford, the defendant, took the stand

465 HOUSES BURNED IN COLON; 11 KILLED

Property Loss in Canal Zone Fire Exceeds $3,500,000 and 7,000 Are Homeless.

BIG BUILDINGS BLOWN UP

Ex-Governor Bermudez Loses a Fortune—United States Troops Do Good Work.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COLON, Panama, May 1.—Complete reports from the fire-swept section of the city late this afternon show that property valued at more than $3,500,000 was destroyed and that eleven lives were lost in yesterday's blaze. The fire burned 465 buildings, covering twenty-two blocks. These will be almost entirely a loss, because there was very little insurance. Small local companies carried insurance on some of these buildings, and these concerns are said to be very hard hit. Some of them may not be able to pay the losses. American insurance companies had generally refused to insure buildings in the burned district because they were of wood and the risk was considered too great.

Ex-Governor Bermudez is considered to be the greatest single loser, his entire fortune, which consisted of investments and property in the burned district, having been wiped out. Other large losers are Brandon, Zahnivogio, and Wilcox, who, with Bermudez, are under indictment in the Burke graft cases.

Late last night it was known that ten persons had lost their lives, and early today another charred body was found in a house in Bolivar Street. There were no Americans killed. Two of those who lost their lives were members of the Panamanian Police, who were crushed by falling walls when it became necessary to dynamite buildings to check the course of the fire.

The Canal Zone Red Cross organized today and enlisted many helpers. It has taken charge of the homeless and destitute, which number more than 7,000, and today, with the assistance of the Commissary Department of the United States Army, was able to feed them. Tonight they are sleeping in tents lent by the army and in homes, warehouses and halls loaned by the more fortunate citizens of the town.

Other military forces have been added to the two companies of Coast Artillery, which Colonel Adelbert Cronkhite ordered on duty last night, and tonight the city is in their hands. They are patrolling under arms and are prepared to deal summarily with looters. Several arrests were made last night, while the fire was at its worst, and the looters are now in the Colon jail waiting trial.

Among the principal buildings destroyed are those of the Panama Banking Company and the International Banking Corporation, both of which have their home offices in New York City. The United States Commissary depot, which was the largest building on the Isthmus, is also a total loss, and this makes it necessary to bring supplies to Colon for the homeless from other commissaries along the Canal Zone.

Investigators have not been able to determine the cause of the fire. It started in the telephone exchange, opposite the railroad station, at Seventh and Bolivar Streets. From there, fanned by a high wind, it swept toward the Cristobal section of the city, and before long all that part of Colon was a raging furnace. The wind blew embers and sparks over into the Cristobal section, and when it was seen that it would be impossible to stop the flames with the inadequate fire-fighting apparatus at hand, orders were given to dynamite the twelve buildings forming the connecting link between the burning section and Cristobal. This was done by the Coast Artillery, in the midst of an inferno of smoke and drifting flames, and it was here that the two Panamanian policemen lost their lives.

The various fire companies that were rushed to Colon on special trains during the fire returned home today.

All of Colon, between Seventh Street on the south to Twentieth Street, and eastward on Front Street beyond Bolivar Street, was destroyed by the fire.

$8,121,674 IN TAXES PAID.

As the Tax Receiver of Manhattan opened his books for the year yesterday he took in $8,121,674 out of the $198,000,000 that he is to collect for real estate, personal, and franchise taxes. This is an increase for the first day of more than $1,500,000 over the first day of 1914.

A large number of the taxpayers were anxious to take advantage of the 4 per cent. rebate granted to those who paid their taxes in one sum. So they paid in the entire amount instead of waiting until Nov. 1 to pay one-half.

Among the largest amounts received yesterday were the taxes of the Metropolitan Railway Company, $1,250,000; William Waldorf Astor, $540,000; George Ehret, $250,000; John D. Rockefeller, Jr., $[illegible]; and the estate of Robert Goelet, $[illegible].

BLAST HURTS CHILD; WORKMEN FACE MOB

Police with Revolvers Disperse 500 Men Who Stone Toilers in Audubon Avenue.

PITCHED BATTLE AVERTED

Volley of Stones Causes Fracture of the Skull of Lloyd Hopkins, 8 Years Old.

A crowd gathered about Lloyd Hopkins, 8 years old, of 591 West 178th Street, late yesterday afternoon as he lay on the sidewalk at 178th Street and Audubon Avenue. A moment before a blast had been exploded at 179th Street and Audubon Avenue and stones the size of chunks of furnace coal had been thrown through the air for more than a block in all directions. Several children, far beyond the limits set by the flagmen who walked out to give warning, had been struck, and the stone which fell on young Hopkins had fractured the boy's skull.

The crowd was in angry mood, and men looked toward the lot where twenty-five employes of the Tony Carfagno Construction Company, 417 East 118th Street, were preparing for another blast. Some one started toward the little group and as though at a signal the crowd broke into a run, heading for the workmen and shouting threats and oaths.

The laborers seized picks and shovels and gathered in a little group. In the crowd which raced toward them were nearly 500 men, and the twenty-five were pale as they stood facing attack. The crowd picked up rocks as they ran. There were plenty scattered by the blast. One hundred feet away the fusillade began. Stones flew about the heads of the little band and they dodged and hid behind their shovels. Each instant they expected a rush, but it did not come.

The crowd halted ten feet away, for lack of a leader to direct the last attack, and the delay gave Policemen Whalen and Collon of the West 177th street station time to run up. They jumped in front of the laborers and with drawn revolvers yelled to the crowd:

"We'll shoot the first man who throws another stone or comes a stey nearer. Get back. Beat it."

The crowd stood hesitant, and police reserves arrived just then and forced the throng away. Antonio Delna of 3,533 Villa Avenue, the Bronx, who set off the blast was escorted to a furniture store, where he was kept in hiding until the last of the crowd had dispersed. A summons was given to him calling for his appearance in court to explain why he had discharged so heavy a blast.

Young Hopkins was taken by Dr. Gluckstein to the Washington Heights Hospital, where it was said his condition was serious, though he probably would recover.

GAS KILLS TWO LITTLE BOYS

Crowd Sees Physician Try to Resuscitate Lads in Harlem.

Peter Smith, 13 years old, and his brother William, 11, were asphyxiated in a bedroom of their home at 120 East 123d Street by gas yesterday morning, and although Dr. Di Palma of Harlem Hospital worked over them, aided by employes of the Consolidated Gas Company, with pulmotors for more than an hour, he was unable to revive them.

The boys lived with their three sisters—Miss Olga Smith, Mrs. Annie Harnett, and Mrs. John Sweeney—their parents being dead. When Miss Smith went to their room to call them at about 10 o'clock they were unconscious in bed and gas was escaping from a fixture. Picking up the younger brother, she ran screaming from the room, and her two sisters ran to the room and carried the elder boy to the street.

Blankets and pillows were obtained and the boys were laid upon them in an areaway. With 500 persons watching, the ambulance surgeon and two Gas Company employes worked over the boys.

BRYAN ON A B C MEETING.

Denies That Negotiations Are Directed Against This Country.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Published reports that the visits of Dr. Lauro Muller, the Brazilian Foreign Minister, to Argentina and Chile, had for their object the formation of an alliance by those countries to counteract the influence of the United States in the Western Hemisphere, were declared by Secretary Bryan today to be unfounded, so far as information reaching the United States Government was concerned. He said the State Department had heard nothing concerning Dr. Muller's visit "that would suggest or indicate anything except the firmest of friendly relations with the United States."

The exchange of visits of high officials of Argentina, Brazil, and Chile has attracted much attention here, but officials look upon any movement tending to unite the largest of the South American countries as helpful toward bringing all the American nations into closer relation.

SAILS, UNDISTURBED BY GERMAN WARNING

Lusitania Off with Her Passenger List of 1,388 Undiminished.

NO BOOKINGS CANCELED

Liner Delayed to Take Passengers of Cameronia, Which Was Suddenly Chartered by England.

The Cunarder Lusitania was delayed two and a half hours yesterday in sailing for Liverpool on account of having to take over the 163 passengers from the Anchor liner Cameronia which was chartered by the British Admiralty three hours before she was due to sail for Glasgow.

The advertisement signed by the German Embassy which appeared in yesterday's newspapers warning Americans not to travel on British steamships across the Atlantic, because they ran the risk of being torpedoed, was commented upon by the passengers on the Lusitania, but did not cause any of them to cancel their booking. On the contrary the big liner left at 12:30 o'clock with 1,388 passengers which was the largest number carried eastbound by one ship this year.

When the attention of Captain W. T. Turner, commander of the Lusitania, was called to the warning, he laughed and said: "I wonder what the Germans will do next. Well, it doesn't seem as if they had scared many people from going on the ship by the look of the pier and the passenger list."

The agents of the Cunard Line, who were on the ship until she sailed, said there was no truth in the printed reports that several prominent passengers had received anonymous telegrams warning them not to sail on the Lusitania. Charles T. Bowring, head of the firm of Bowring Bros., and President of the St. George's Society, who was a passenger, said that it was a silly performance for the German Embassy to do and below the dignity of a diplomatic representative of any foreign government.

Alexander Campbell, general manager for John Dewar & Sons, London, who was returning home after transfering his firm's business in this country to an agency, said: "I think it is a lot of tommy rot for any Government to do such a thing, and it is hard to believe that the German Ambassador dictated the advertisement. The Lusitania can run away from any submarine the Germans have got, and the British Admiralty will see the she is looked after when she arrives in striking distance of the Irish coast."

D. A. Thomas, the wealthy Welsh coal operator, who sailed on the Lusitania, accompanied by his daughter, Lady Mackworth, the English militant suffragette, said he was not worrying about the ship being attacked by submarines.

Charles Klein, the American playwright, told a TIMES reporter, who asked him about the warning in the newspapers, that he was going to devote his time on the voyage to thinking of his new play, "Potash & Perlmutter in Society" and others, and would not have time to worry about trifles.

Elbert Hubbard, the publisher of The Philistine, who sailed for Liverpool on the Lusitania with his wife, said he believed the German Emperor had ordered the advertisement to be placed in the newspapers and added jocosely, that if he was on board the liner when she was torpedoed he would be able to do the Kaiser justice in The Philistine.

Every precaution was taken yesterday at the pier to prevent any suspicious person from getting on board before she sailed. Each passenger had to fall into line and claim his or her baggage. Any package or case, apart from the trunks and valises, had to be opened before it could be sent aboard. The passengers passed in single file by a desk where their tickets were examined by Cunard clerks, and detectives wer stationed at the pier end of all the gangways.

Automobile trucks and taxicabs were sent to the Anchor Line pier, foot of West Twenty-fourth Street, to bring the Cameronia's passengers to the Cunard pier, fot of West Fourteenth Street, but as her sailing hour was noon it was some time before they could be got together with their baggage.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who was one of the last to go on board, said he was going over to spend three weeks in London to see his stable and look over some property he had there.

NO EXPLANATION AT EMBASSY

Said Informally That Warning Was Simply a Friendly Act.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—While no formal explanation was forthcoming from the Germany Embassy today in regard to the reason and purpose of the advertisement inserted in New York newspapers this morning by the Embassy, warning Americans not to take passage for Europe on vessels fying the flag of Great Britain, or any of her allies, it was said there informally that the advertisement must be taken as an entirely friendly act on the part of the German Government. The advertisement, it was explained, merely supplemented and did not modify the German order establish a war zone around the British Isles.

According to the Embassy, the advertisement was intended to call the war zone order to the attention of Americans who contemplated visiting Europe. The advertisement was inserted at this time, it was said, because the season of European travel was at hand and the German Government wanted to take every precaution to prevent the possible loss of American lives.

As to the reason for the course adopted of giving the notification through a newspaper advertisement instead of through formal notice to the State Department, it was said that this course was not unusual, as a precedent for it was found in the action of the German Embassy in inserting an advertisement in American newspapers at the outbreak of the European war, notifying German reservists in this country that they were called to the colors.

Secretary Bryan declined to comment on the German Embassy's advertisement further than to say that it hadn ot been taken up for consideration by the State Department.

427 ABOARD THE ST. LOUIS.

Steamer Flying the American Flag Carries Biggest List of the Season.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 1.—The steamer St. Louis sailed for New York today with 427 passengers, much the largest list in five months.

Among the passengers was the Hon. Mrs. O. Brett, nee Heckscher. When asked if she was taking a steamer flying the American flag because she was afraid of German submarines, she replied, with a laugh: "I have no more fear of submarines than I have of Zeppelins attacking London."

Mrs. Gordon Selfridge also was on board with her daughters and her son. They are going to the San Francisco Exposition.

THE CUSHING WAS HIT BY AIRMAN'S BOMB

Van Dyke Reports Attack on American Ship—To Make Representation to Germany.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Secretary Bryan today received from American Minister Henry van Dyke at The Hague a report on the attack by German aviators on the American steamship Cushing, and said tonight that this report would be immediately cabled to Ambassador Gerard at Berlin for his information. Ambassador Gerard will bring the matter to the attention of the German Government. The report from Minister van Dyke was very brief, and read as follows:

"The American Consul at Rotterdam reports that the American steamship Cushing, Captain Herland, with petroleum from New York to Rotterdam, flying the American flag, was attacked by German aeroplanes near the North Hinder Lightship, afternoon April 29. Three bombs dropped, one struck ship, causing damage, but no life lost."

Officials here said the case was the first of its kind during the present war, and that so far as they could recollect there was no precedent in other wars. While there are no international conventions specifically covering the incident, it was generally believed today that representations would be made to Germany with request for payment of damages, on the ground that a neutral vessel, which under the ordinary rules of international law, should be free from molestation, had been attacked.

It was not thought in official quarters that any serious issue would be raised, because it is accepted that the bombs were not dropped deliberately, but under the impression that a hostile vessel was being attacked.

The Cushing had $419,000 insurance on her hull and cargo issued by the Government War Risk Bureau. She is a Standard Oil ship, formerly under German registry.

GERMANS ARE ROUTED IN SOUTHWEST AFRICA

British Capture 200 of 800 Engaged, Besides a Large Amount of Booty.

CAPE TOWN, (via London,) May 1.—The following official statement regarding the operations in South Africa was issued today:

"General McKenzie's mounted force, which was designated to cut off the Germans who, after the evacuation of Keetmanshop, (in German Southwest Africa,) retreated northward along the railway, inflicted a serious defeat on them in the vicinity of Gibeon. The Union forces, by destroying the railway north of Gibeon, captured a whole railway train, a number of transport wagons, a great quantity of live stock, two field guns, several Maxims, and 200 prisoners.

"The remnant of the German force, which was 800 strong, escaped owing to the rough ground obstructing the movements of the cavalry."

HOLD UP PAY FOR COTTON.

Owners of Cargoes Fret Under Delay by British Officials.

LONDON, May 1.—Notwithstanding the repeated inquiries by Walter Hines Page, the American Ambassador, and Robert P. Skinner, Consul General at London, no action has been taken to pay the owners of the cotton on the steamers Southerner, Carolina, New Sweden, Spyros Valuianos, and other cotton cargoes, the British Government has announced it will buy.

Only a small amount of the cotton has b en unloaded, and some of it has been held for more than a month with heavy loss in demurrage payments. The British officials apparently are unwilling to undertake the responsibility of actually taking over the cotton. The agents and cargo owners have urged the Admiralty and the Board of Trade to release the vessels and to say where claims for damages mayr be filed. All repiles have been indefinite.

The Norwegian steamer Artemis V., from Nw Orleans for Gothenburg with a cargo of foodstuffs, was stopped at Kirkwallou April 25 and taken to Avonmouth. A part of the cargo was thrown into the prize court.

FRENCH WARSHIP STRANDED

Superdreadnought Lanquedoc Kills Three at Her Launching.

BORDEAUX, May 1.—Three persons were killed here today in an accident in connection with the launching of the battleship Languedoc. The vessel left the ways with such speed that she stranded on the bank of the river. She struck andcrushe d a lighter, on board which the fatalities occurred.

The Lauguedoc is of the superdreadnought type, of 24,830 tons. She carries twelve 13.4-inch guns, twenty-four 5.5-inch guns, and six torpedo tubes. She is 574 feet long and cost $13,312,000.

REJECT MINE OWNERS' OFFER

British Miners Won't Accept 10 Per Cent. Increase in Wages.

LONDON, May 1.—The conferences which have been going on in London between the mine owners and the mine laborers have ended in a deadlock.

Representatives of the men today definitely rejected the offer made by the owners of a 10 per cent. increase and decided to leave the matter in the hands of Premier Asquith, who will appoint an arbiter to settle the dispute.

PEARSON TRIED IT BEFORE.

Boer General's Mule Case in 1901 Like the Wisconsin Munitions Suit.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Officials of the State and Justice Departments, it was learned today, have discovered that a similar suit to that filed in Wisconsin on Thursday by Samuel Pearson, seeking to prevent the exportation of war munitions, was brought by a person of the same name in New Orleans in the course of the Boer war. In that suit Samuel Pearson, a refugee Boer General, sought to prevent the exportation of American mules for the use of the British Army. Officials believe the complainant to be the same in both cases.

The suit brought in New Orleans in 1901 was before the United States Circuit Court and was directed at the Captains of stock transports carrying mules to South Africa. The court denied a temporary injunction on the ground that the questions involved were political and could only be dealt with by the executive branch of the Government.

HURL MORE SHELLS INTO FAR DUNKIRK

Big German Guns Bombard the French Seaport, Killing More People with Huge Missiles,

ALL USELESS, SAYS PARIS

And Shows Kaiser's Leaders Know They Cannot Break Through the Allied Lines

LONDON TRUSTS TO AIRMEN

LONDON, May 1.—The bombardment of Dunkirk has been renewed by the Germans, using their big guns or guns from behind their lines in Flanders.

There have been more victims from the shells, and many women and children are leaving the French seaport.

Refugees, arriving today at Folkestone from Dunkirk, report that six shells from 17-inch guns fell in Dunkirk last evening at intervals of ten minutes, and that considerable damage was done to the town.

Both the Paris and Berlin official bulletins also chronicle the renewal of the firing, the former stating that ten shells fell in the city.

The Germans can repeat this bombardment whenever they wish with the big guns, which were formerly posted on the coast to ward off attacks from the allied fleet, but have now been moved up in the direction of Nieuport.

London newspapers say this bombardment of Dunkirk means that the Germans still cling to their idea of occupying the French Coast nearest England.

Nevertheless, confidence is felt here that the allied aviators, who have already discovered the location of the German weapons and attacked them at least once, will yet find a way to deal with them.

Dug Holes 45 Feet Across.

PARIS, May 1, 4:50 A. M.—Dunkirk remained calm and there was no sign of a panic while it was being bombarded by shells from giant German guns, according to the editor of a newspaper of that city, who has arrived in Paris.

He said that the bombardment began at 11:30 A. M. Thursday and continued until 2:30 P. M. Twenty projectiles in all were hurled into the city. They fell at intervals of about seven minutes. All of them were fifteen-inch shells, which blasted craters sometimes forty-five feet across and sent up great columns of dense black smoke.

The French War Office tonight issued this official comment on the shelling of Dunkirk and its meaning.

The bombardment of Dunkirk by heavy artillery is a new proof that the Germans have not been able to pierce our lines; nor have they obtained by it any appreciable result. They are striving to impress neutral opinion by these manifestations, without military efficacy.

From the viewpoint of the development of the operations, this bombardment is without importance; its effect is entirely localized to the destruction of a few houses and the killing of peaceable inhabitants of Dunkirk. New victims of German barbarity are the only results obtained by the enemy.

The position of the armies confronting each other in Belgium, is without any modification whatever.

Tells of Airmen's Escape.

The official reports issued by the various War Departments today contained little news of distinctive or important operations on the battle front except aviation exploits. The night bulletin issued in Paris says:

The day has been relatively calm in Belgium, and there is no news of any important occurrence in the Argonne. Last night two German attacks near Bagatelle were easily repulsed.

In the Forest of Le Prêtre we have taken several trenches and made 130 prisoners, capturing one machine gun. We are maintaining our positions on the ground which has been conquered.

One of our aeroplanes, while flying this morning over Homme, was hit by a splinter from a shell, which penetrated the reservoir. The machine, however, succeeded in returning to our lines, passing over the first line of German trenches at a height of only 400 meters. It was riddled with bullets during this difficult flight, and at the moment of landing came under the fire of the enemy's artillery. The aviators, nevertheless, returned uninjured.

This statement came from the German Headquarters Staff:

The battle reported yesterday on the western bank of the Ypres Canal ended unsuccessfully for the enemy, who lost heavily. To the east of the canal and north of Ypres the enemy made several unsuccessful attacks.

Between the Meuse and the Moselle only infantry engagements took place in the vicinity of Ailly and Apremont. All the French attacks failed with very heavy loss.

On April 29 we shelled Rheims as a reprisal for the bombardment of places behind our fighting line. As the enemy knows the meaning of this full well, it will be easy for him to avoid the necessity of our shelling Rheims.

The enemy lost three aircraft yesterday. An English airman was shot down southwest of Thielt, (near Bruges, Belgium,) another fell near Wieltje as the result of our fire, and a third enemy aeroplane was obliged to land near Niedersulzbach.

ADMITS GERMAN SHIPS GOT TO BELGIAN COAST

French Naval Chief Says Swift Light Cruisers Came—Could Do No Harm.

BORDEAUX, May 1.—"The English blockade remains as firm as ever, and it would be a dangerous experience to attempt to force it," said Victor Augagneur, French Minister of Marine, speaking on the subject of the German bombardment of Dunkirk to a representative of the newspaper France de Bordeaux et du Sud Ouest today.

"Never has it been a question of the bombardment of Dunkirk by a German ...ser," the Minister said, "or by the ...my's vessels of large tonnage against ...r coasts. The enemy's projectiles ...ake from the point of their front near... to Dunkirk. The city was bombard... from the land, not from the sea.

"We know that light cruisers of ... knots, belonging to the enemy, ...ve entered one point and arrived off ...e Belgian coast, but these vessels as... that they were able to reach the ...city of Dunkirk, could not bombard ...at city effectively, as the calibre of ...e guns of the light vessels is only 4.6. ...he shells used on Dunkirk were all of ...ge calibre."

Speaking of the operations at the ...ardanelles, the Minister asserted that ...ositive and definite results, which he ...rovided with absolute confidence, might ...e expected soon.

Probably the light German cruisers ...hich the French Minister of Marine ...as reached the Belgian coast are ves... of the type of the Karlsruhe, which ...as developed a speed, so far as re... of twenty-seven to twenty-nine ...nots. When the war began in August ...ermany had four of these afloat, the ...arlsruhe, Rostock, Graudenz, and Re...nsburg. Two others were nearing ...mpletion, having been laid down in ...14. These were the Ersatz Hela and ...e Ersatz Gefion. Two others were ...uilding, the Ersatz Gazelle and the ...ratz Niobe.

These vessels are 456 feet long and ...ve a beam of 45 feet, and a draught ...17 feet. Their normal displacement is ...00 tons.

The first four vessels of the type are ...own to have had batteries of twelve ...4.1-centimeter (4.1-inch) guns. There ...ve been hints, however, that the later ...es might be armed with ten guns of ...ger calibre, say, 15-centimeter (5.9-...ch) guns. The 4.1-inch gun referred ...o by the French Minister of Marine is ...ublless the Krupp 12-centimeter gun.

NEW AMERICAN GUN CAN REACH 31 MILES

12-Inch Weapon, Such as Experts Figure the Germans Are Now Using.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The shots ...ed into Dunkirk Thursday from a ...ge weapon, or weapons, from behind ...e German lines near Nieuport, at a ...nge of about twenty-two miles, are ...id by American army experts to be ...e greatest long-range firing known in ...ual warfare.

Several instances are recorded of long-...nge firing with powerful artillery in ...me of peace. In England, during ...een Victoria's Jubilee celebration, ac...rding to statements made by an ord...nce expert here today, a shot from a ...-inch gun was fired across water ...out twenty-one miles. Several in...nces of long-range gunnery have been ...corded on German proving grounds. ...t never before in war have missiles ...en hurled so far as in the attack on ...unkirk.

"There has been much talk about ...e new German guns, such as ...-centimeter (19.6-inch) and 55-cen...meter (21.6-inch) guns of a how...r type, calculated to shoot twen...-five miles, but ordnance experts ...y that weapons of such a calibre ...d type would not be used in twenty-...e-mile firing. These men insisted to-...y that the weapons used in the at...k on Dunkirk were of no greater ...libre than twelve inches. The latest ...rman guns of this calibre could easily ...er the distance from the German ...e to Dunkirk if fired at an angle of ...enty-five degrees.

"The United States has coast defense ...ns which could exceed the range at ...ich the German guns are supposed to ...ve been fired. The guns are the lat... American model, and they could du...cate the German feat, if mounted on ...riages so constructed as to enable ...e weapons to fire at an agle of 45 de...ees.

"Elaborate computations of what might ...e accomplished by firing American ...apons at an angle of 45 degrees have ...en worked out by the experts for guns ...f varying calibre, both coast defense ...ns and mortars. The most powerful ...ns in long-range firing is a twelve-...ch gun. When fired at an angle of 45 ...grees, this gun has a range of 55,000 ...rds, or over 31 miles. The highest ...int of the trajectory or line of flight ...f the projectile would be 21,000 yards, ...early 12 miles.

"This highest point of flight would be ...ver a point 30-55ths of the distance ...om the gun to the target. Stated dif...rently, the highest point of flight ...ould be 21,000 yards in the air directly ...er a point 30,000 yards from the gun ...d 25,000 yards from the target.

"It is calculated by the experts here ...at the highest point, reached by the ...lls fired from the German lines, ...enty-two miles into Dunkirk, was ...out seven miles. They estimate that ...e time of flight from the German guns ...as about 107 seconds. This is about the ...test time made by a body projected ...rough space by a man-made machine. ...e German projectiles, fired into Dun...rk must have averaged about 3.45 ...iles a second.

"If twelve-inch weapons were used, and ...e weight of the projectile was about ...00 pounds, it probably cost the Ger...ans about $1,000 for each shot fired, ...clusive of the cost of operation and ...ansporting the guns to the front.

"A weapon which would fire shots ...enty-two miles into Dunkirk would ...obably approximate a 12-inch gun, now ...ed in American coast defenses. This, ...fired at an angle of 45 degrees, would ...ve a range of 41,000 yards, or over 23 ...iles. The highest point of the trajec...ry of this weapon would be 13,500 ...rds, or about 7½ miles, and the mis...le would reach its target in about 107 ...conds.

"But this gun would fail by eight miles ...equal the range of the other Ameri...n 12-inch coast defense naval weapon, ...entioned above, though it is also of ...-inch calibre, and fired at an angle of ...degrees. The difference in the ranges ...tween 41,000 yards and 55,000 yards) is caused ...the different ballistic properties of ...e two weapons, the different initial ...locities, weight of shell, and loading ...harges.

"Plotted on a diagram arranged in ...ocks, 5,000 yards to the inch, the ...es representing the trajectories of ...ese American 12-inch coast defense ...apons, the one of 55,000 yards range, ...e other of 41,000 yards range, and ...th fired at the high angle of 45 de...ees, appear colossal when compared ...ith the trajectory of the best Ameri...an mortar fired at the same angle.

"The range of this mortar gun, when ...red at 45 degrees, would be 19,000 ...rds, or nearly 11 miles, and the high...t point of its trajectory would be ...00 yards, or about three miles. The ...ajectory of the 12-inch coast defense, ...aving a range of 55,000 yards, is four ...mes higher, and the range is almost ...ree times greater than that of the ...ortar gun fired at the same angle.

"Such long-range firing as was ac...mplished in the attack yesterday on ...unkirk could not be done by weapons ...ke the German 42-centimeter gun, ...hich is primarily a howitzer and has ...short muzzle. This long-range firing ...uld only be accomplished by high-...owered naval or coast-defense guns, ...uilt primarily for direct firing and for ...enetration through hardened steel ...rmor at long ranges.

"The German 42-centimeter guns have ...range of about 19,000 or 20,000 yards. ...he trajectory of missiles fired from ...em more nearly resembles that of ...ortar firing.

ASPHYXIATING GAS FAILS.

Pumped Into Cellar to Overcome a Maniac, Who Finally Is Lassoed.

PARIS, May 1.—Asphyxiating gas, ...hich has been used with considerable ...uccess along the battle line, failed to ...ssist the authorities materially in their ...fforts to capture Jean Boutet, an in...sane workman, who attempted to kill his wife and then barricaded himself in the cellar of his home, at St. Ouen, a town on the outskirts of Paris. A lasso and the adoption of "Wild West" methods proved effective, however. Efforts of the police to drive Boutet out of the cellar were futile, and an appeal was made to Paris. Firemen were sent from this city, with the Director of the City Laboratory and a supply of gas, which was pumped into the cellar. One fireman, equipped with a smoke helmet, entered and tried to seize the madman, but soon crawled out, half suffocated and without his helmet, which Boutet had pulled off. After a somewhat prolonged siege, the workman was lassoed and carried off to an asylum.

ENTERTAIN IRISH M. P.'S.

French Deputies Give a Luncheon in the Visitors' Honor.

PARIS, May 1.—The Irish members of the British Parliament, headed by T. P. O'Connor and Joseph Devlin, who yesterday presented an address to President Poincaré, were entertained today by the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the French Chamber of Deputies. A luncheon was given in honor of the visiting Irishmen, and speeches were made by René Viviani, the French Premier; T. P. O'Connor, Joseph Devlin, ex-Premier Léon Bourgeois, Deputy Denys Cochin, a member of the French Ministry without portfolio, and Deputy Albin Rozet.

The speeches were an eloquent expression of the close ties of sympathy uniting France and Ireland, and alluded to the victories gained by the two peoples while fighting for a common cause.

FRENCH VIEW OF DERNBURG.

Temps Writer Thinks He Is Setting Us Against England.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 1.—The Temps New York correspondent admits that the course being followed by Dr. Dernburg, in the United States has not been entirely unproductive.

By fostering ancestral distrust of England, says the correspondent, Dr. Dernburg has produced a British navalism bogey to offset German militarism. The result, the writer goes on to say, is that America distrusts British marine supremacy and might welcome a naval defeat, though thoroughly friendly with France. He also says that Dr. Dernburg has succeeded in partly obscuring the picture of ravished Belgium behind a cloud of alleged Anglo-Belgian intrigues.

RUSSIA AS "CHIEF FOE."

Berliner Tageblatt Does Not Consider England in That Light.

In an editorial article printed under the initials of Theodor Wolff, the editor in chief of the Berliner Tageblatt, in the issue of April 12, it is pointed out that the growing tendency to discuss in the German press the question, "Who Is Our Chief Foe" is attributable to the desire to formulate properly the terms of settlement on which Germany should insist. Despite the widespread tendency to regard England as the "chief foe," the Tageblatt insists that Russia must always be regarded as the chief danger.

"The thought that there can be any danger greater for us than the Russian danger," it says, "deserves no sober consideration. When the German people was summoned to war it happened because this Russian danger stood menacingly at our borders and the borders of Austria-Hungary, and all that we have seen and experienced since then certainly proves that this threatening Colossus was not, as the optimists thought, a worm-eaten scarecrow.

"Nor is it right to suppose that an expansive force such as that which lies in the Russian Empire can be diverted permanently by artificial diplomatic strokes. This expansive force has advanced at the same time toward Persia, toward Armenia, toward Mongolia, and has nevertheless sought its field of operations also in the Balkans. An opponent who acts as a result of political motives or ill-will or sentimental emotions might some day disarm when he has been sufficiently taught by the course of the battle and no longer sees any progress possible through force. But forces of nature that must remain continually the same do not disarm.

"The Russian people—under which term we do not mean the incendiaries—is much dearer to many of us than the narrow-minded and jealous squinting average inhabitant of many other lands who may have clothed the nakedness of his arid soul with somewhat more rags of civilization. But a friendship with an unweakened Russia could lead only to disillusionment and humiliation, for the natural Russian impulse for conquest rises above all friendship and all fraternity, as is clearly shown by the Dardanelles discussion. Because the liberty-loving peoples of the European North perceived the weirdly swelling tide of the conquest or weakening of that power the true sense of the German war, they are following with hopeful sympathy the death-defying German fighters, no matter what differences of opinions or of preferences they may otherwise have.

ALLIES' ATTACK AIDED THE RUSSIANS

Neuve Chapelle Attack by British and Champagne Campaign by French Called Timely.

DARDANELLES MOVE HELPED

British Army Officer Sees in These Events Proof of Excellent Co-ordination of Efforts.

The success of what is termed the "hit and hold" policy of the allied French and British armies in France is emphasized in a review by a British officer of recent events in the western theatre of war which is featured in The Army and Navy Gazette of London in its issue of March 20. The review deals principally with the operations of the French in Champagne and of the British around Neuve Chapelle. These were begun, it is stated, to lessen the pressure on the Russian armies, as well as to aid the policy adopted by the allied General Staffs.

The review says in part:

"Apart from its record of local successes, the French communiqué of March 11, giving the principal reasons for the recent offensive operations in Champagne is eminently satisfactory as evidence that the campaigns of the entente powers on both fronts are being conducted on a general plan with coordination of efforts, a fact emphasized by the sequence of events generally in all the theatres of war since Von Hindenburg's defeat of the Tenth Russian Army in East Prussia on Feb. 10-12, and the subsequent full development of the Austro-German offensive against both flanks of the Russian line, for on the 16th the French offensive in Champagne, and on Feb. 19 the attack on the defenses of the Dardanelles by the Anglo-French fleet commenced, while renewed Russian activity in the Caucasus is being manifested.

"Further in the western theatre on March 10 the task of continuing to hold the Germans was taken up by the British Army, the immediate result of whose successes at and around Neuve Chapelle in the La Bassée region has been to draw large bodies of German troops from other parts of the western front as reinforcements for those in the threatened sector.

"Compared with the extent of territory covered, whether in advance or retreat in the operations in the eastern theatre, the actual ground gained by the French in Champagne between Feb. 16 and March 10 may appear insignificant after three weeks' continuous and severe fighting, but the results obtained are not to be measured by kilometers. An advance of two of three kilometers on a front of seven kilometers, as in this case, represents in the west more than an advance of many kilometers in the east. On this side progress can only be made by tedious, niggling, trench warfare; on the other, in spite of few and abominable roads and of the severity of the Winter climate, the fighting, by reason of that very severity, is above ground and of the nature of encounter battles, since intrenching is impossible to any great extent in the frozen soil, often covered with deep snow.

"That in certain sections of the eastern front we have heard of the attack and defense of lines of entrenchments, is to be accounted for by the fact that these entrenchments were generally dug before the grip of frost had settled on the region from Northern Poland to the Carpathians and beyond."

The review quotes from the German communiqué of March 10, in which the Germans admitted that they had suffered heavy losses, but claimed that the French losses exceeded their own, totaling about 44,000 men, and that "the French exertions succeeded in producing no effect on the situation in the east."

"All of which," the review continues, "only serves to accentuate the fact that but for the very opportune French counter-stroke in Champagne, continued since March 10 in the La Bassée region by the British Army, a very considerable portion of the German forces thus pinned down would, by now, be swelling the reinforcements brought up against the Russians in Northern Poland.

"That these containing movements in the West are still necessary to ease the pressure on the Russian armies is manifest by the situation in the East. But it is to be noted that the counter offensive of the French in Champagne and of the British around Neuve Chapelle, does not represent all the efforts being put foward by the western allies in pursuance of their 'hit and hold' policy. In the Argonne, after heavy fighting at Vauquois and Bouzeuilles, the French have occupied positions within a few miles of Varennes, which dominate the district and are conducting a very important but little noted campaign in the Vosges, based on Belfort and Epinal, and are in possession of the passes leading from France into Alsace. They are not only holding up the extreme left of the German line, but are also threatening Gernay and the railroad to Colmar and Strassburg from advanced positions at Thann and Steinbach in the Valley of the Thur.

The Bacillus of Long Life

Typical Bulgarian Peasant

THE scientific researches of Massol, Grigeroff, Tissier, Combe, Wollmann, of the Institut Pasteur, Paris, and other noted scientists on the PROLONGATION OF LIFE give us overwhelming evidence of the value of the lactic acid or sour milk ferments as a powerful remedial agent in the treatment of disorders arising from intestinal poisoning.

Where Old Age Is the Rule

They knew that the various poisons produced by intestinal microbes were the cause of nearly all the disturbances of the liver, digestive organs and the nervous system.

It was in the sour milk of Bulgaria—where many people live to be 125 years old—that they finally found the bacillus that would destroy the poison-producing microbes, improve the health and leave no ill effects.

Intesti - Fermin - Tablets are the scientific combination of Bacillus Bulgaricus and the sustaining element Glyco-Bakter—the Bacillus of Long Life—and if persistently taken, will purify the whole system and remove the cause of inorganic ill health, add zest to your life and efficiency to your work.

THOUGHT AMERICAN A SPY.

Italian Liner Held Up While British Officers Questioned Him.

Captain Angelo Sturiese of the Italian liner Dante Alighieri, which arrived yesterday from Genoa, reported that he was detained six hours at Gibraltar by British officials on account of a first-cabin passenger, Ferdinand A. Mersits from Budapest, who was suspected of being an Austrian spy.

The liner passed through the Strait of Gibraltar at noon on April 22, and was about thirty miles from the rock when the Captain received the wireless message from the British flagship, ordering him to return at once. He complied and three naval officers in uniform and three Secret Service officers came aboard his ship. Mersitz was questioned regarding his nationality and said he was an American citizen. He produced a copy of his naturalization papers which were taken out in 1905 in Cleveland, Ohio, where he had a drug store from 1902 to 1908. From that period Mersitz said he had been living in Budapest and was returning to enter business again in the United States. He was allowed to proceed to New York.

Osvaldi de Zugliani, who arrived on the Dante Alighieri with his wife, an American woman, said that they lived in Italy near the Austrian border, about forty miles from Venice, and had left the country for fear of invasion by the Austrians.

"Venice has no defenses by sea or land," Mr. Zugliani added, "and the people are much alarmed over the prospect of a war between their country and Austria. There have been several riots over the high prices of food, and the situation grows worse each day."

Captain Sturesi reported that he had eight cases of printed pamphlets from Germany in his hold consigned to a firm in New York. He said he had promised to take them back and hand over to the British authorities at Gibraltar.

SERBIA THANKS AMERICANS.

Head of Sanitation Commission Welcomed in Nish.

NISH, (via London,) May 1.—Crown Prince Alexander today received Dr. Richard P. Strong, head of the American Sanitation Commission in Serbia, and expressed thanks for the generous assistance rendered by the United States to the Serbian people.

The Serbian Prime Minister also received Dr. Strong and expressed the profound gratitude of the Serbian people to the American Red Cross Society and the Rockefeller Foundation for the work that they have undertaken.

ESCAPED FROM PRZEMYSL.

Sergeant and Fourteen Hussars Reach Austrian Lines.

VIENNA, May 1, (via Berlin and London.)—Sergeant Johann Szacz and a detachment of fourteen hussars, who were attached to the Austrian garrison at Przemysl, have reached the Austrian lines after an adventurous journey. They left Przemysl a few hours before it was surrendered to the Russians on March 22. They were obliged to travel through a country filled with Russians. They spent the days hiding in woods and traveled by night.

On a number of occasions they encountered Russian patrols, but lost only one man. They brought important information as to the disposition of the Russian forces.

Archduke Joseph Ferdinand invited Sergeant Szacz to dinner, and rewarded him with a gold and a silver distinguished service medals.

GERMANS ADVANCE IN NORTHERN RAID

Report Capture of 1,000 Prisoners and Retreat of Russian Force Toward Mitau.

PETROGRAD BELITTLES IT

As of No Strategical Importance—Berlin Admits Heavy Loss in Augustowo Encounter.

LONDON, May 1.—On the eastern front interest centred today on the Russian Baltic provinces, which are being raided by the Germans.

The extent of this new raid has not been disclosed. Although the Germans announce that the Russians evacuated and burned Szawle (Shavli) and retired toward Mitau, there is no evidence of any big battle being fought, and the Russians express confidence in their ability to deal with this new diversion.

A semi-official statement given out in Petrograd tonight says:

"The offensive of the German forces on the right bank of the Niemen River, radiating from the districts which were the theatre of previous operations, is of no strategical importance.

"It may be explained as an attempt to include, for foraging purposes, within the sphere of operations the section of frontier territory which has not yet been ruined by war. This offensive, consequently, is regarded with perfect equanimity by well-informed Russian circles, where the certainty exists that the only result of the new plan can be at most the acquisition of an insignificant amount of food and forage."

Along the East Prussian frontier and in Central Poland there has been a renewal of the fighting which the Spring floods interrupted, while in the Carpathians, where the ground is drying, the Russians and Austrians again are contending for Uzsok Pass.

For the moment the Russians have turned from their offensive against that pass to attack the Austrians who were threatening their communications in the directions of Stry and have, according to their report, won considerable success, capturing two heights and a number of prisoners. They also claim to have repulsed an attack by the Germans who hold a line near Wyszkow, further to the eastward.

It is expected that a big offensive will soon be undertaken on the eastern front, probably by the Germans who have been feeling their way toward the Russian positions around the East Prussian frontier, although this may be a feint to hide a movement on some other part of the line.

Germans Take 1,000 Prisoners.

BERLIN, May 1, (via Wireless to Sayville.)—The following report was issued today by the German War Office:

An engagement near Szawle, in Kovno, resulted advantageously for the Germans. The Russians fled after setting fire to the town. One thousand Russians were taken prisoner, and ten machine guns, a great amount of baggage and ammunition carts, and a large quantity of ammunition were captured.

Russian attacks east of Plock on the south bank of the Pilica River, and at Kalwarya, near the East Prussian frontier north of Suwalki, have been repulsed. Three hundred and fifty Russians were taken prisoner.

To the southwest of Augustowo a German vanguard company was surprised by the Russians and suffered heavy losses.

The German advance in the northeast is being hailed generally with expressions of satisfaction and surprise. Nothing was known of such a movement, although judging by the fact that the troops already are over fifty miles from Memel, the march must have begun some days ago.

Local military experts point out that Szawle, (Schawle or Shavli,) where the fighting is proceeding, is to the east of the line between Kovno and Vilna, two points which are indispensable to the protection of the Vistula and Warsaw.

The fact that the troops had advanced so far without being discovered is commented upon as an indication that the scouting service of the Russians is no better today than it was during the Russo-Japanese war. It is declared here that the Russian commander faces the possibility of the cutting of his line of communications unless he abandons his forces and the line of the river, or throws the invaders back.

VIENNA, via London, May 1.—The following Austrian official war statement was given out here tonight:

In Russian Poland lively artillery engagements are reported. Russian troops have been dislodged from several position.

In western Galicia and in the Carpathians there is no change.

Yesterday the enemy made further violent attacks against the heights of the Orawa and Opor Valleys captured by us, but were again repulsed with very severe losses. We captured 500 prisoners.

In southeast Galicia and Bukowina there have been artillery engagements at times. South of Zaleszczyki one of our batteries set fire to a Russian ammunition store.

AWAIT EXPULSION OF KURDS.

TIFLIS, Transcaucasia, Saturday, March 27, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Many thousands of the Assyrian inhabitants of the country west of Lake Urumiah have had to flee before the coming of the raiding Kurds. Some 45,000 or 50,000 of these people a few months ago occupied the smiling gardens on the lake shores. Now 12,000 are refugees in Russia and some 15,000 or 17,000 toow refuge under the protection of Dr. Harry P. Packard of the American Presbyterian Mission at Urumiah. His successful efforts in their behalf already have been told by cable. His name will survive in Assyrian traditions.

The members of the Central Committee of the Assyrian or Chaldean Christians are awaiting only one thing, the return of the Russians, to endeavor to reconstruct into a safe community this remnant of the ancient empire of Nineveh. The committeemen fled with their families. They can only hope today that some of their relatives will be returned to them from Kurdish enslavement. Those who did not escape, or were made slaves, perished.

The committeemen speak English fluently, and were at one time prosperous merchants. This was before their little tribe was gripped by the cogs of the great war.

Until American missions were established in the Urumiah country the Assyrians maintained their religious traditions by semi-annual reading from half a dozen cherished parchment New Testaments, taking the additional precaution of requiring the more gifted youth to memorize the whole of their sacred literature. With mission schools and hospitals, enlightenment and prosperity increased. The Assyrian villages were as famous for neatness and comfort as their gardens were for fertility. Further encouragement and protection were brought by the Russians, who came into the country about nine years ago.

"The Assyrians took sides with the Russians in this war, while the Mohammedans turned to the Turks and Germany. Organized and drilled by Russian officers, the Assyrians rendered valuable services by fortifying some of their villages and guarding the caravan roads to Urumiah. About 250 were regularly enlisted, the Central Committee supplying the funds. Later, 2,000 or 3,000 volunteers were under arms and had some training.

Toward the end of December the Russians and Assyrians defeated a large body of Kurds, inflicting a loss estimated at 500.

Fleeing before impending massacre, 3,000 of the Assyrians gathered at a strong village, Geogtapa, and held their ground five days with a loss of seventy men.

TO SEIZE POLAND ESTATES.

Germans Tell People to Confiscate "Donation Property."

BERLIN, (via London,) May 1.—"As a reprisal for the damage done in East Prussia by the Russian invaders, the Commander in Chief of the Eastern Army has instructed the civil population of Russian Poland to seize the so-called donation property, that is, estates confiscated by the Russians in the various Polish revolutions and later given to Russian officers and officials," says a German statement given out here tonight. The statement continues:

"The Polish and German tenants of these estates will be left in possession. The estates comprise some 232,000 Prussian acres, of which 107,000 had been let by lease."

DEADLOCK IN THE MOUNTAINS.

Austrian General Says the War Could Last for Years.

VENICE, (via London,) May 1.—The contending armies in the Carpathians are "now both strongly intrenched against one another, and therefore the war could last for years, and would be decided by economic and not by military forces," General Borovich, Commander of the Austrian forces in the Carpathians, is quoted as saying in an interview with a representative of A Nap, a Budapest newspaper. The General continued:

"We soldiers are here to prevent this and make economic destruction through the war impossible. We are here to achieve final victory on the battlefield, but an offensive costs great human sacrifice. We spare our human material because it is most valuable to us. Therefore we must wait to attack at a moment when conditions are most favorable. If victory costs thousands of men, victory must also be worth this sacrifice."

SMOKERS' SACRIFICE.

Give Money to Wounded Instead of Buying Tobacco.

VENICE, May 1.—Throughout Hungary today is being observed as "Abstain-from-Smoking" day.

Every smoker will be expected to abstain from using pipe, cgar, or cgarette and to gve the money thus saved to a fund for nvald solders.

RUSSIA WOULD AID ITALY.

Hems the Attack on Hungary Instead of Cracow and Silesia.

The war correspondent of the Budapest Az Ujsag reports an interview with a Russian officer of high rank captured recently in the Carpathians. He gives reasons for the Russian invasion of Upper Hungary.

"The Russians selected for their offensive," the officer said, "the wild ravines of the Carpathians instead of the plains of East Prussia in view of Italy's attitude. Italy dare not declare war upon Austria because the Austro-Hungarian troops garrisoned in the Trentino in the first moment of the war would invade Lombardy. The determined Russian offensive against Hungary compels the Austro-Hungarian staff to dispatch regiment after regiment from the Italian frontier to North Hungary, thus giving Rome a chance to start its offensive in Tyrol.

"If there has been no other political reasons Russia would never have invaded Hungary, because, from a strategical standpoint, she needs but to capture the Carpathian passes without further advance to prevent a possible attack through them in the rear of the Russian army operating against Cracow and Silesia. Last Fall, after capturing the passes, the undefendent State of Upper Hungary lured the Cossacks into Hungary, and now the aim is to give Italy a chance to strike."

Germans Pay for Delaying Trawlers

AMSTERDAM, (via London,) May 1.—The German prize court at Hamburg, acting on instructions from Berlin, has awarded indemnity to several fishing firms for time lost when their trawlers were held up in the North Sea by German warships.

ZANGWILL ASSAILS RUSSIA.

His Sonnet Also Reproaches England for Condoning Outrages on Jews.

Israel Zangwill, who at the beginning of the war issued an appeal from England to the Jews of the world to support the cause of the Allies, in the conviction that the Russian Czar and Government had undergone a change of heart with regard to the Jewish problem in Russia, and that the condition of Jews in that country would be ameliorated as a result of the war, has apparently experienced a change of heart. Under the title "For Small Mercies," Mr. Zangwill has written for the current number of the Menorah Journal a sonnet in which he praises the London Nation for being the "one voice in England" that dared to point out the unchanged policy of persecution still practised by Russia toward its Jewish population.

In the sonnet reference is made to "the spheres," the only permissible form in which allusion may be made in Russia to the Czar and his counsellors. The sonnet reads:

Thinking of Poland and her tortured Jews,
"Twixt Goth and Cossack hounded, crucified
On either frontier, e'en the Pale denied,
Wand'ring with bloodied staff and broken shoes,
Scarred like their greatest son with stripe and bruise,
Though thrice a hundred thousand fight beside
Their Russian brethren and are glorified
By death for those who flout them and abuse—

I suddenly was touched to thankful tears,
Not that one wave had ebbed of all this woe,
Not that one heart had softened in "the spheres,"
One touch of bureau-malice to forego,
But that amid blind eyes, dumb mouths, deaf ears,
One voice in England said these things were so.

USING OXEN IN BERLIN.

Take Places of Truck Horses, Requisitioned for the Army.

BERLIN, (via London,) May 1.—Oxen may soon take the places in this city of many of the truck horses, which have been requisitioned for military purposes.

The police have abrogated the ordinance which prohibited their use in the city and the first yoke seen in the streets of Berlin in many years appeared today.

CANADIANS RIDDLED IN SLOW RETREAT

Gave Ground Stubbornly as They Fought Overpowering Forces at St. Julien

AND MADE COUNTERATTACKS

British, Coming to Their Aid, Cheered the Dominion Soldiers for Their Brave Deeds.

OTTAWA, May 1.—The story of what he describes as "a great and glorious feat of arms," the desperate battle fought by the Canadian division to check the German advance near Ypres, was concluded in the second instalment of a cable communication from Sir Max Aitken, the Canadian Record Officer, given out by the Militia Department today. This instalment described the retreat of the Canadian division from St. Julien with the loss of two units.

In the first instalment, issued last night, Sir Max described the breaking of the Allied line by the emission of gases, which forced the French to retreat, leaving the Canadian left without support, and the valorous attempts by the Canadians to halt the German advance. This carried the account up to Friday, April 23. The second instalment continued the story as follows:

"The fire of the artillery of the enemy continually grew in intensity," the account says. "It became evident that the Canadian salient could no longer be maintained against the overwhelming superiority of numbers by which it was assailed. Slowly, stubbornly and contesting every yard, the defenders gave ground until the salient gradually receded from the point where it had originally aligned with the French, and fell back upon St. Julien.

"Soon it became evident that even St. Julien, exposed from right and left, was no longer tenable in the face of overwhelming numerical superiority. The third brigade was, therefore, ordered to retreat further south, selling every yard of ground as dearly as it had done since 5 o'clock on Thursday. But it was found impossible without hazarding far larger forces to disentangle the detachment of the Royal Highlanders of Montreal, Thirteenth Battalion, and of the Royal Montreal Regiment, Thirteenth Battalion. The brigade was ordered not a moment too soon to move back. It left these units with heavy hearts.

"The German line rolled over the deserted village, but for several hours after the enemy had become master of the village the sullen and persistent rifle fire which survived showed that they were not yet master of the Canadian rearguard. If they died, they died worthy of Canada.

"The enforced retirement of the Third Brigade—and to have stayed longer would have been madness—reproduced for the Second Brigade, commanded by Brig. Gen. Curry, the position of the Third Brigade itself at the moment of the withdrawal of the French.

"The Second Brigade had retained the trenches which it was holding on Thursday afternoon, supported by the incomparable exertions and by the highly hazardous deployment of the Third Brigade. General Curry flung his left flank around, and in the crisis of this immense struggle held his line of trenches from Thursday afternoon until Sunday afternoon. He did not abandon them. There were none left. They had been obliterated by artillery. He withdrew his undefeated troops from the fragments of his field fortifications, and the hearts of his men were as completely unbroken as the parapets of his trenches were completely broken.

"The Ninetieth Winnipeg Rifles, which held the extreme left of the brigade position at the most critical moment, was expelled from the trenches early Friday morning by an emission of poisonous gas, but, recovering in three-quarters of an hour, it counter-attacked, retook the trenches it had abandoned, and bayoneted the enemy.

"After the Third Brigade had been forced to retire Lieut. Col. Lipsett, commander of the Winnipeg Rifles, held his position, though his left was in the air, until two British regiments filled up the gap on Saturday night.

"After a very formidable attack the enemy captured St. Julien, opening up a new line of advance, but by this time further reinforcements had arrived. Again it became evident that the situation dictated an offensive movement as the surest method of arresting further progress.

"General Alderson, commanding the reinforcements, directed an advance by a British brigade which had been brought up in support. As the troops making it swept through the Canadian left and centre, many of them going to certain death, they paused for an instant with deep-throated cheers for Canada, indicating the warm admiration which the Canadians' exertions had excited in the British Army.

"The advance was costly, but could not be gainsaid, and the German advance along the line was arrested."

Despite this check, the account says, the Second and Third Brigades were gradually driven fighting every yard upon a line from Fortuin, south of St. Julien, in a northeasterly direction toward Passchendaele. There the two brigades were relieved by two British brigades "after exertions as gloriously fruitful and, alas, as costly as soldiers have ever been called upon to make."

On Monday morning General Curry was again called upon to lead his shrunken Second Brigade, reduced to a quarter of its original strength, into action at the apex of the line, which position the brigade held all that day. On Wednesday it was relieved and retired to the rear.

"Such is the story of a great and glorious feat of arms," reports Sir Max. "The artillery, he said, never flagged. One battery of four guns was compelled to face directly about and fire upon the enemy in two opposite directions. Not a Canadian gun was lost in the long battle of retreat.

Concluding his account, Sir Max wrote:

"The empire is engaged in a struggle without quarter and without compromise against an enemy still superbly organized, still immensely powerful, still confident that its strength is the mate of its necessity. To arms then and still to arms! The graveyard of Canada in Flanders is very large."

TO DENY GERMANS WORK.

London Society Women Also Boycott All German-Made Goods.

LONDON, April 20, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Society women have called a meeting, to be held in the Mansion House on May 13, to organize a campaign against the employment of "alien enemies" in England. Lady Glanusk is at the head of the movement. Lord Charles Beresford, Sir Henry Dalziel, and Sir E. Cornwall will be the principal speakers at the meeting.

There are now 73,000 Germans at large in England, and in London alone 16,000 German men of military age walk about at liberty. It will be the aim of the Anti-German League to work up public sentiment against allowing these to roam at large or to continue in employment as waiters, barbers, and the like, and also to induce the public to restrain from buying German-made goods, both now and after the war.

The propaganda is based on the assumption that every German not interned is an active spy. But this view, which is not new, seems to be confined to a small group of patriots, of whom Lord Beresford is the most active.

To close the restaurants to German waiters, Lady Glanusk, with the active support of the Countess of Leicester, Lady Wenlock, Lady Mansfield Clarke, Lady Owen Phillips, Sir Lionel Darell, and others, has opened a training school for waiters, admitting only British boys. Arrangements have been made with a French institution of the same kind to exchange boys, so as to teach each a foreign but necessary language.

PRISONERS IN CANADA

Outbreak, with Bloodshed, at Kingston, Raises Rumors of Vengeance for Lonsdale.

KINGSTON, Ontario, May 1.—Two Germans were seriously hurt at the Fort Henry Military Prison when they and some of their fellow-prisoners made an attack upon two guards. The guards, to protect themselves, had to use their bayonets, and as a result the two prisoners were hurt. One suffered a wound near the heart, and is in a dangerous condition, and the other was bayonetted in the wrist.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., May 1.—Copies of The Kingston (Ontario) Whig received here today tell of disorders in the military prison at Fort Henry, Kingston, last Thursday night in which, it was said, several German prisoners were bayoneted, two of them being afterward taken to a hospital, one in a serious condition.

According to The Whig, the trouble began when three German prisoners, who had been locked up all day for being unruly and had had nothing to eat for two meal periods, kicked their food at supper time out of the hands of the attendants serving them. Other prisoners, it is said, then began to fight the English servants. The thirteen guards, the account continues, thereupon fixed bayonets and charged the prisoners, subduing them after a fight. The prisoners who participated in the disturbance, it is said, were confined in dungeons with the exception of the men in the hospital.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, May 1.—The attempt made by three German prisoners in Fort Henry Barracks, Kingston, on Thursday night, to injure the guards and escape from the camp for internes, may have international developments. The decision of the Supreme Military Court in Germany in imposing a sentence of death upon Private William Lonsdale of Leeds, England, for attacking a German non-commissioned officer at the military prison camp at Doeberitz, has roused the military authorities here. General Hughes, the Minister of Militia, says that if Londale's sentence is carried out, a court-martial will be held in Canada, and a similar sentence will be meted out to the German prisoners. This can be done under military law, which is the only law which applies in the case of prisoners of war.

Among the German prisoners is a well-known German officer, a Count, who owns large properties in the West of Canada. He is said to have been the ringleader in the attack upon the guards. In Londale's case, the evidence goes to show that he struck a German non-commissioned officer only under extreme provocation, while in the case of the prisoners at Fort Henry Barracks a deliberate attempt was made, without the slightest provocation on the part of the military authorities, to kill or disable the guards and escape from the prison.

SHELLS ENOUGH FOR BIG GUNS.

Ordnance Officer Intimates England Has Cartridges to Last Till September.

According to a prominent official, connected with the Ordnance Department of the British War Office, who left on the Lusitania yesterday for Liverpool, there is not likely to be any shortage of shells for the big guns, which are being used by the army and navy.

"When I left London some weeks ago," he said, "there was enough ammunition for the artillery in the field to last until the end of the year, and the factories were adding to the supply daily. There might be a shortage in rifle ammunition because such vast quantities are used, but I think there are sufficient cartridges to keep the troops going until September.

"The outcry for more ammunition which is being made continuously in England is a good thing, however, because it keeps every one keyed up to the proper pitch, and under the present prospect it is hard to tell how much we shall want. As I understood it, there was a greater shortage in rifles than in cartridges."

"When do you think the war will be over?" he was asked.

"All I can tell you," replied the official, "is that I made a wager of twelve dinners at my club in London that it would be finished by Sept. 1, and now I am afraid that I shall have to pay for them."

SAILINGS FOR WAR ZONE.

Galveston Ships Large Cotton Cargoes to Great Britain.

THE GLASGOW AT MONTEVIDEO

Cruiser Returns to South America from Norfolk Patrol.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, May 1.—The British cruiser Glasgow, which sailed from Montevideo on April 2, returned to this port today.

The Glasgow was off the Virginia Capes last month, with other British cruisers which patrolled the coast after the arrival at Newport News of the German converted cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm. This patrol was abandoned after the German warship was interned.

RUSSIAN STEAMER SUNK.

Submarine Blows Up a Collier on the Irish Coast.

LONDON, May 1.—The Russian 2,000-ton steamer Svorono, carrying Welsh coal for Archangel, Russia, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine on Friday at noon, near the Blasket Islands, on the west coast of Ireland.

The Svorono's crew of twenty-four men, mostly Russians, barely had time to take to the boats when the vessel sank. All were rescued by a patrol boat. The submarine is believed to be the U-23.

BRITISH SHIP EDALE SUNK.

Submarine Blows Up Cargo Vessel Off the Scilly Islands.

LONDON, May 1.—The British steamer Edale, from the River Plate, South America, for English ports, was sunk by a submarine today off the Scilly Islands. All of those aboard were saved.

The Edale was a cargo steamer of 2,000 tons net and was 325 feet long. She was owned by the Dale Steamship Company of Middlesbrough, England, and was built in 1901. She sailed from Montevideo, Uruguay, for England on March 29.

ARMS SALES LEGAL, DERNBURG ADMITS

And Germany Has Not Protested, He Tells Political and Social Science Delegates.

REPLIES TO DR. GREGORY

Also Explains That the von Bernstorff Note Was an Expression of German Government.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., May 1.—Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, former Minister of State of Germany, today qualified as "absolutely false" the statement of Dr. Charles Noble Gregory of Washington, that Germany had protested against the shipment of arms by the United States to the Allies. At the same time he admitted that the memorandum sent by the German Ambassador on the subject to the State Department was an official communication from the German Government and not Ambassador von Bernstorff's individual view.

Dr. Dernburg's statement was made in a short speech before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and was received with close attention by the several hundred leaders of industry, finance, and economy, as an expression from the Kaiser's Government.

That portion of Dr. Dernburg's speech wherein he referred to Dr. Gregory follows:

"This is a world war and must be followed by a world peace, a permanent one," said he. "And I do not think there are a great many people who do not know what the war means and who will not do everything to avert such a catastrophe in the future. The speaker who preceded me did not keep strictly to the subject of discussion and if I may I would like to refer to something that was said last evening. The speaker, discussing the shipping of arms and ammunition, said that Germany had protested against the legality and the right to ship arms and ammunition by this country. He made this attack against the representatives of my country in the United States.

"I shall not enter into this question. But I do want to say that a Government should not be attacked in this way, and I want to state right here, most emphatically, that Germany has at no time disputed the right of the United States to ship or to sell arms. The statement made by Mr. Gregory is absolutely false. Every just endeavor by the United States to extend its trade from South America meets sympathy in Germany and we believe that the greater the possibility of free intercourse the richer the people get, and the more chance they have to provide themselves, the better off everybody is."

Dr. Dernburg added after the session that the von Bernstorff memorandum was to be taken as the official communication of the German Government and not as Ambassador von Bernstorff's private views.

"The German Government has never protested against the shipment of arms and munitions of war by the United States," said he. "The memorandum merely pointed out the unfairness of permitting shipments of foodstuffs to Germany to be held up by Great Britain, while shipments of arms to the Allies were going on unmolested."

Dr. Dernburg refused to make the nice diplomatic distinction more clear.

DISCUSS PEACE AND TRADE.

Many Notable Addresses Before Social Service Academy.

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—Among the speakers addressing the American Academy of Political and Social Science here today and tonight were Oscar S Straus, formerly American Ambassador to Turkey, John Hays Hammond, Morris Hilquitt, the Socialist leader; Alexander J. Hemphill, G. Lowes Dickinson of Kings College, Cambridge, England, and W. P. G. Harding of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. Straus reviewed the American policy toward European nations as expressed in Washington's Farewell Address and the Monroe Doctrine, and, after calling attention to it as a policy of aloofness, asked these questions:

"Has America the right to demand participation in the conference of the belligerent nations following the present war for the purpose of arranging the peace of the world?

"Even if we should not have the right in the event that we should be invited by the belligerent nations as the leading neutral power to participate in such a conference, can we do so without impliedly, if not expressly, relinquishing our traditional attitude of exclusive control over purely American questions?

"This contingency will bring to the foreground the consideration, if not the wisdom, of a further extension if not a reversing of the American traditional policy as outlined by Washington when he said: 'The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.'

"Te question that would present itself is: Have not the world relations and the interdependent interests of nations since Washington's admonition was given become so closely and intimately related that our duty to other nations as well as our own enlightened self-interests make it imperative upon us not to stop, but to unite with the nations of the world in such a policy, be it by international agreement, by entering into a league with the leading nations of the world, or by becoming a member of a world federation, or by uniting on such a joint arrangement as in the wisdom of nations may be determined upon as the most practical and effective for the establishment and maintenance of the peace of the world?"

Distress in South America.

Mr. Hammond reviewed the financial distress in South America resulting from the war, suggested that a Pan-American Supreme Court be established to decide disputes relating to foreign investments and Pan-American commercial transactions, and referred, at the close of his speech, to the Monroe doctrine, as follows:

"Genuine, not merely professed amity, is a great asset in commercial relations; and since the larger South American nations regard the Monroe Doctrine as supererogation on our part, it would seem good business, to say the least, to restrict the application of the Doctrine to such territory as is necessary for the defense of the Panama Canal and of our sphere of influence in the Caribbean Sea area. As to the rest of South America, the Monroe Doctrine might well be superseded by a Pan-American defensive alliance against attempts at territorial aggrandizement from abroad."

Alexander J. Hemphill, President of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, said that with the conclusion of the European war would come the greatest demands upon financial America. He estimated the wastage of capital by the war on a year's duration at $40,000,000,000.

"There is no doubt," he said, "that should we continue to practice economies and follow the sound business methods which we have recently pursued, we will not only have abundant resources for our prosperous business, but also be able to take care of the reasonable demands of other nations."

Mr. Harding said that first place in the field of international finance might come to the United States as a consequence of the war. To obtain that preeminence in international finance, however, tendency toward inflation and a wild temporary boom, such as history had shown frequently followed the conclusion of great wars. He said the nation now was in a commanding position and pointed to the fact that the trade balance had been in favor of the United States to the amount of $719,000,000 for the last nine months.

Two Plans for Peace.

Mr. Dickinson outlined the following as the best manner in which America could contribute to the maintenance of world peace:

Peace to be established through the intervention of President Wilson.

The convention of a congress at which all European States, belligerents and neutrals alike, should be represented, such congress to be presided over by President Wilson.

Substitution of the former system of alliances among European powers with an international guarantee of peace, backed by force if necessary.

Morris Hillquit, writer, outlined what he deemed to be an effective plan for ending the war—a plan, he said, which "would come with such commanding moral force that it could not be ignored by the belligerent powers." His proposal was that all the nations at peace, under the leadership of America, join in a definite and urgent offer of mediation, the neutral nations to act as an "international concert of powers," and to pursue their object until peace were finally established.

Dr. Luis F. Corea, former Minister of Nicaragua to the United States, said if the United States became involved in a foreign war it would not be alone, for the Latin American Republics would "demonstrate that the territory of this continent cannot be attacked with impunity."

Dr. E. E. Pratt, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, said the time was opportune for American manufacturers to extend their trade in South America. He discussed various ways in which this could be done.

James A. Farrell, President of the United States Steel Corporation, sent a paper, in which he said that our trade with Latin-American countries had increased substantially since the war began, but that the United States would have to exert every effort to retain this advantage against the determined competition of Europe after the end of the war.

Mr. Farrell said that England and Germany secured a strong foothold in South American commerce by lending money to the countries of the Southern Hemisphere. The outbreak of hostilities brought an end to the investment of European capital in South America, he stated, and then came the opportunity of the United States.

"The development of Latin-America cannot proceed without foreign capital," said he. "Citizens of the United Kingdom are forbidden, during the war, to invest in foreign enterprises, which eliminates England, France, Germany or Belgium, leaving the United States as the only great nation whose trade balance is increasing and whose gold is accumulating.

"That American capital is educated to foreign investment is proved by the fact that its holdings in the Dominion of Canada are nearly $700,000,000, exclusive of agriculture, and $500,000,000 in Mexico, Central America, Cuba, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Chile and Peru. Since the beginning of the war $30,000,000 of short term Argentine treasury notes have been taken in the United States, one of the conditions of the issue being that the proceeds should remain in the United States as a credit against the Argentine purchases of American merchandise. This unusual condition illustrates the advantage of making loans to countries which can become large purchasers of our products.

"British investors are retaining their Latin-American properties, which will prove more valuable than ever after the war, in view of their freedom from the heavy taxes which war imposes upon investments in the United Kingdom. How important a part British capital will play in the financing of Latin-America after the war remains to be seen, but the consensus of financial opinion seems to be that interest rates will materially increase, and the amount of this increase, as compared with the price of United States loans, will doubtless determine the question of who is to be the chief investor."

Frank A. Vanderlip, President of the National City Bank, New York, said the United States had not yet felt the full financial effect of the European war. He presided at the session at which was discussed America's financial position as affected by the war, and spoke briefly before introducing the speakers on the program.

Mr. Vanderlip said the inflation of note issue and the inflation of credit in the European countries at war has acted as a cushion against the shock. He thought the effect on the financial situation will eventually be felt more seriously than it is at present.

The present easy money situation in the United States, according to T. W. Lamont, a member of the Morgan banking firm of New York, was not due to excessive inflation in Europe. Mr. Lamont spoke of the future of finance following the war saying:

"We shall see the spectacle of the business men of all nations paying to one another their just debts. We shall see the German merchant keeping his word sacred to the English and the French to the Turk. We shall see finance standing ready to develop new enterprises to find money to till new fields; to help rebuild a broken and wreck-strewn world."

Dr. Joseph French Johnson of New York University said he believed the United States would have to furnish money and foodstuffs after the war to help Europe make a quick recovery. Dr. Edwin S. Mead of the University of Pennsylvania did not expect a great inflow of immigrants after the war because, he said, the able-bodied men would be needed at home. The question of trade expansion, he said, was bound up with our national defense, and he urged the United States to look well to the defenses of the country. A. B. Leach, President of the Investment Bankers' Association, said the net result of the war on this country's finances would be of substantial benefit.

CATHOLIC PEACE PRAYER.

Cardinal Farley Issues Instruction for Its Use This Month.

The following announcement regarding prayers by Roman Catholics for a cessation of the war in Europe, has been issued to the Catholics of the Diocese of New York by direction of Cardinal Farley, through decree of the Pope:

"By decree, dated April 9, 1915, our Holy Father, Pope Benedict XV., has directed that the following prayer for peace, which was said on last Passion Sunday, be recited every day in all the churches and chapels of the world during the May devotions:

PRAYER.

Dismayed by the horrors of a war which is bringing ruin to peoples and nations, we turn, O, Jesus, to Thy most loving heart as to our last hope. O, God of Mercy, with tears we invoke Thee to end this fearful scourge. O, King of Peace, we humbly implore the peace for which we long. From Thy sacred heart Thou didst shed forth over the world divine charity, so that discord might end and love alone might reign among men. In this hour, made terrible with burning hate, with bloodshed, and with slaughter, once more may Thy divine heart be moved to pity. Pity the countless mothers in anguish for the fate of their sons. Pity the numberless families now bereaved of their fathers. Pity Europe, over which broods such havoc and disaster. Do Thou inspire rulers and peoples with counsels of meekness. Do Thou heal the discords that tear the nations asunder. Thou who didst shed Thy precious blood that they might live as brothers, bring men together once more in loving harmony. And as once before the cry of Apostle Peter, "Save us, Lord; we perish," Thou didst answer with words of mercy, and didst still the raging waves, so now deign to hear our trustful prayer and give back to the world peace and tranquillity. And do Thou, O, Most Holy Virgin, as in other times of sore distress, be now our help, our protection, and our safeguard. Amen.

"An indulgence of 300 days may be obtained once in the day, and a plenary indulgence may be obtained in the customary form of the Church by the faithful who have taken part for not less than twenty days in the recitation of the above prayer."

GIRLS MAKE HEROIC OFFER.

Cardiff Sisters Would Undergo Torture to Aid Wounded Men.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 1.—Two Cardiff girls named Brockington have offered to give part of their skin for grafting on wounded army airman to expedite recovery.

Their heroism is enhanced by the fact that they know the pain which the operation involves, because four years ago they underwent a similar one in aid of an injured brother.

SAYS GERMANS TREAT PRISONERS CRUELLY

Shocking Story of Berlin and Ruhleben Concentration Camps Told by Released Londoner.

BRITISH NEARLY STARVED

Barbarous Punishment Meted Out for Slight Infractions of Rules—Some Prisoners Slain, He Says.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 1.—Intimate facts touching upon alleged brutality toward English civilians in the German concentration camps in Berlin and Ruhleben were laid today before Ambassador Page by a prominent Londoner who has just got back home after a harrowing experience. Mr. Page was urgently asked to forward the information to the Washington Government in the hope that Ambassador Gerard might be instructed to investigate, with the ultimate idea of Washington officially interceding. Mr. Page, evidently deeply impressed with the incidents revealed, undoubtedly will communicate with Washington.

On top of the revelations of the Londoner Mr. Page was visited today by Grafton Minot, Private Secretary to Ambassador Gerard in Berlin. Mr. Minot was informed of the details given to Mr. Page and it is understood that he is to take the matter up with Mr. Gerard immediately on his return to Berlin next week.

Ambassador Page's visitor, now a physical wreck, formerly was an athlete, a tennis player well known in America. He is reluctant to have his identity revealed, as he has friends still in the concentration camps, and he is afraid they might be severely punished in revenge for his daring to talk. He not only laid the facts before Ambassador Page, but he also talked with British officials. The story he tells deals also with military prisoners in other camps—information imparted to him on what he calls the most reliable authority.

To THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent Mr. Page's informant in his interview tonight explained that, after terrible sufferings in the Berlin and Ruhleben camps lasting nearly five months, he was recently released on the diagnosis of a camp physician that to keep him a prisoner longer would be fatal. In managing to get his release he was more fortunate than other civilian prisoners, more than thirty of whom he said had died as a result of the treatment received at the hands of the Germans. Now he must undergo a difficult operation on the spine in order to save his life. His hip became diseased from hardships endured in camp.

At the outbreak of the war the Ambassador's caller was at Baden-Baden sojourning with other Londoners. From the day war broke out until Nov. 1 he was detained as a civil prisoner at Baden-Baden. Six days later he was put with 200 other Britishers in a common jail.

One Bowl of Soup in 34 Hours.

"On Nov. 13," he said, "some dozens of us were marched through the town to the railroad station and sent to Berlin, a journey of about thirty-four hours. We had only one bowl of soup each on the way. Attempts to buy food on the platforms of the stations were insolently repressed. Throughout the journey we were insulted by soldiers.

"On Nov. 15 we arrived at the Ploetzensee jail in Berlin, after marching through a drizzling rain from the Charlottenberg station. The exhaustion caused by this journey and the bad conditions, together with a lack of food, undoubtedly caused the death of Morrison Cleator, Acting Consul General at Mannheim.

"At the jail thirteen of us belonging to the learned professions were divided between two cells, while the rest, about seventy, were housed in cages in one room unfit for dogs. These cages were built especially for the British prisoners. They were not high enough to stand in—just room for a wooden bed. The sanitary conditions were terrible, and the beds were alive with vermin.

"On Nov. 28 we were marched through the streets again and sent to Ruhleben. One semi-paralyzed man and several other invalids, seated on top of the baggage wagon, suffered intensely, and more than once tumbled from the wagon to the street. At Ruhleben we were forced to sleep on the floor, with no straw. In the prison were nearly 2,600 civil prisoners, all Englishmen, who got the scantiest attention. There was no furniture in the hospital beyond the beds and a few iron chairs and tables from the race course. Prisoners complaining of nearly starving were told by the German officers to write home for food.

"About the middle of March the suffering from want of food became acute. If it hadn't been for food sent on from England by parcel post many would have starved to death. Originally the hospital had two doctors, who had to attend 1,500 patients, as more than half of the prisoners fell ill. One doctor died and now the remaining physician does the work. The prisoners had to help with the doctors' cases. Some prisoners went mad and we had to watch them.

Brutality by Officers.

"While more than thirty prisoners have died it is amazing that more have not succumbed. I could relate innumerable instances of brutality by officers upon civilian prisoners. One feeble man of 60 was knocked down with a blow of a musket in the hands of an officer, and his face caved in. Right up to the time I was let out the unspeakable cruelty to prisoners went on."

The informant says he has indisputable evidence of reliable eye-witnesses that British soldiers at the Cellelager and Münster military camps have been hideously maltreated by German soldiers. Prisoners, he said, were tied to a stake for some violation of orders, after being stripped of their clothes. Three died after being cut down. One soldier was shot dead for trying to conceal a loaf of bread under his coat after he was nearly exhausted from hunger, another, who released his hold for a moment while helping to drag a vehicle along a road, was shot in the hand, and his hand was so splintered by the bullet that it had to be amputated.

"Americans don't realize the awful treatment of these prisoners by Germans in direct violation of The Hague treaty," said the returned prisoner. "I hope that for the sake of the poor fellows now prisoners an inquiry may be seriously undertaken so that the exact facts may be revealed in the name of humanity."

A letter has been received in London from Fred Winter, a well-known English jockey, who before the war was first jockey to the Kaiser, and who is now a prisoner in the Ruhleben camp, in which Winter asks for bread and biscuits. He says:

"Oh, I do wish I could get my freedom. You can't realize what it is like to be caged up as we are. Just think, from 6 in the morning until 9 o'clock at night we have nothing whatever to do but walk about. It preys on the mind."

Winter does not explain the circumstances of his internment.

GAFFNEY'S SON-IN-LAW HIT.

Major Hans von Wolf Wounded in the Fighting at Ypres.

MUNICH, May 1.—Major Hans von Wolf of the Royal Saxon Artillery, a son-in-law of St. John Gaffney, the American Consul General here, was wounded in the recent fighting in the vicinity of Ypres.

Frau von Wolf, formerly Miss Jayta Humphreys and a step-daughter of Mr. Gaffney, has gone to Aix la Chapelle to nurse her husband.

The von Wolfs were in South Africa when the war began and finally reached Germany after undergoing many exciting experiences.

JOHN LANE SAYS WE ARE FOR ALLIES

English Publisher Discusses American Opinion—Mahan Praised British Navy.

A "BREAK" IN WASHINGTON

The German Ambassador Was Present When Mr. Lane Rejoiced Over the Emden's Capture.

The London Morning Post has printed a letter from John Lane, the well-known publisher, headed "England and the United States; Transatlantic Friendship."

Mr. Lane begins by saying that on his arrival in America he was congratulated by every one on England's "splendid attitude" in the great war. Part of his letter follows:

"Some, however, thought that we were not doing enough in America to win, or, at any rate, to retain, American sympathy, inasmuch as we did not employ any Press Bureau in the face of the persistent, if misdirected, German propaganda. It is true that the White Paper had been published and widely distributed by the enterprising NEW YORK TIMES as one of its many supplements. This was followed by the publication of some other official papers, the whole issued as a reprint in folio form. I understand that a movement is on foot for the publication of all the official documents relating to the war, of all countries involved, in larger type, in one octavo volume, chiefly for the use of public libraries, and this volume, I believe, will contain an introduction by some well-known public man.

"The German Ambassador, Count Bernsdorff, by his volubility, in and out of season, has done much to alienate even some of his own countrymen, while our Ambassador, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, has throughout acted with discretion and courtesy, thereby making friends in every direction.

Armour Had Talk with Kaiser.

"It was my privilege to meet and discuss the war—its genesis at any rate—with such well-known men as Senator Root, Richard Olney, Mr. Choate, George Foster Peabody, ex-President Eliot of Harvard, President Judson of Chicago University, and many other university Presidents and professors. I also had a very interesting meeting with George Armour at Princeton, who was with the German Emperor in July, but I have not his permission to print what can be best described as a thrilling conversation that took place between them on that occasion. However, the friendship between Mr. Armour, his brother Allison, and the German Emperor is well known, even in England. Although Mr. Root, Mr. Olney, and Mr. Choate are bound by loyalty to the neutral policy of President Wilson, there was unmistakable evidence of their sympathy.

"I was warned in many clubs against speaking openly about the war. The morning after I arrived in Washington I walked into the Metropolitan Club, where an old friend, engaged in conversation with another man, greeted me with surprise at seeing me, as he said, 'on this side,' whereupon his companion looked at me askance and walked away, just as I was saying, 'Well, we've caught the Emden at last.' (It was the day the report was first published.) Upon which my friend remarked: 'Do you know who that was?—Count Bernsdorff, the German Ambassador.' The next day I met Admiral Mahan, whom I had seen last year in London, where he had been for two weeks without any communication whatever from the Admiralty. On my ascertaining the fact that he had only three more days in this country, Mr. Churchill was communicated with and a meeting was arranged. Of this Admiral Mahan informed me in Washington with evident appreciation. How differently so distinguished a man as the inventor of the term 'Sea Power' would have been received in Germany.

"I recall with deep interest the enthusiasm expressed by Admiral Mahan for the brilliant exploits of the British Navy. He knew and acknowledged the great services it has rendered, first of all in guarding the route across the Atlantic, and then in convoying troops from the uttermost ends of the earth to the seat of war, and in the annexation of Germany's colonies. In the face of such mighty work, he regarded the disaster to the Good Hope and the Monmouth as mere incidents of warfare. Within two weeks of this date Admiral Mahan passed away.

Pro-Germans in the West.

"In Chicago and the West I found some exponents of the German cause—especially in Chicago, where there are 750,000 Germans, or the American-born children of Germans. I was told by the librarian of a public library that the passage in the speech of a British Cabinet Minister, invoking the blessing of the Almighty on the arms of the Allies, had been erased from a local paper, and the erasure had been traced to a pro-German who excused himself by stating that it was an insult to God to ask for His blessing when the Allies were supported by the Yellow Race. Another librarian informed me that the committee of his library would not allow the purchase of Bernhardi's 'The Next Great War,' because it weakened the German case.

"Wherever I went I was forcibly struck by the fact that in nearly every American University there are to be found professors who are loud in their support of the Pan-Germanic policy. But in most cases I discovered that these professors had visited Germany through the German-American system of exchange professorships, and had received some personal attention from the German Emperor during their stay.

Influence of Roosevelt.

"On my return to New York, after visiting Canada and some of the West—a growing feeling that the President should have seized the opportunity of protesting against the violation of the Hague Convention and the invasion of Belgium. This feeling is largely due to Mr. Roosevelt, and it is feared, in some quarters, that the next Presidential election may be fought on the question of a greater army and navy for the United States. I found that public opinion in the East was more consolidated than when I first arrived, and there was ted States. There is also a growing prejudice against the belligerents' methods of propagandism. All that is now asked for is the publication in book form of the collected official papers of the nations at war.

"It is a lamentable fact that in all the bookshops are to be found piles of pro-German books, while there are practically no books on the side of the Allies, exceptin Prof. Cramb's irritating book, another one by Douglas Sladen, and a small but excellent book by F. W. Whitridge, besides a few very good pamphlets, including the brilliant Oxford series, which are seldom to be found in the bookshops of American cities.

"It should be placed on record that the two great factors in formulating the American friendship for England have been the invasion of Belgium and the fact that England was unprepared for war. The latter has been the means of refuting all the German charges of aggression on our side. Indeed, many Americans realize and openly acknowledge that we are fighting their battle—in other words, if Germany were by chance victorious, her next war would be with America.

"I also met Americans who expressed in forcible terms the opinion that the navy of the United States should guard the Atlantic, seeing the number of Americans who are crossing from and to Europe. On the Lusitania, going out and coming back, 90 per cent. of the passengers were Americans, although, of course, all were sailing under the British flag. The recent bombardment of Scarborough and Whitby—unfortified pleasure resorts—will emphasize this feeling, for America will not forget that Germany has signed The Hague Convention, in which Article I. decrees that 'the bombardment by naval forces of undefended ports, towns, villages, dwellings, or buildings is forbidden.'"

SUNDAY DRINK BILL HEAVIER IN ENGLAND

Dealers Increase Price of Whisky and Brandy 50 Cents a Bottle to Conserve Stocks.

BREWERS ENTER PROTEST

Meanwhile, New Statistics Showing Slackness of Labor in War Industries Are Cited.

LONDON, May 1.—Those people of the British Isles who today went to purchase their supplies of wines and spirits for Sunday found that the prices had been increased in proportion to the new taxes which the Government proposes to levy in its effort to lessen drinking and increase the output of munitions of war.

The price of whisky and brandy had been increased by 50 cents a bottle, which meant a difference of $3 to those people who purchased by the gallon. This increase was made despite the fact that all stocks had been taken out of bond long before the new taxes were levied and therefore had cost the dealers no more than usual. The dealers explained, however, that the demand had been so great that they were compelled to conserve their supplies, wholesale dealers having for some time, in anticipation of the new legislation, refused to deliver goods at the old prices.

The price of beer has not yet been affected nor did whisky and brandy cost more when bought by the glass, except in a few places. Wines varied according to the glass of the places where it was purchased.

Meantime protests from the trade continue. The Burton brewers in a resolution passed at a meeting today declared that the surtax on the Burton output alone would amount to upward of £6,000,000, ($30,000,000,) and that it would prove destructive to the whole trade and throw thousands of men out of work, besides depriving shareholders of their capital. As regards pale ale, for which the town is famous, the resolution stated that the proposed increased tax together with the war tax levied last November would amount to more than 700 per cent.

Ireland would be particularly hard hit for outside of whisky the Irish breweries make a large part of the heavier beers consumed in the world, and the tax on these would be very heavy.

Newspapers which a few weeks ago favored absolute prohibition oppose the new proposals, which, they insist, are unfair to the trade, unnecessary, and would not achieve the object aimed at. The Bishop of London today urged the public to sacrifice drink, for the general good. It would make the people realize, he said, that there really was a war, and he asked his hearers to back up the Government in "its brave efforts to grapple with an evil which was throttling the nation's life."

Official figures of the number of hours lost by the ironworkers of the Clyde and the northeastern coast of England, presumably because of the lure of drink, show that the men engaged in the mechanical equipment of the army and navy are doing less work now than before the war. During the month of March 36 per cent. of the men worked under forty hours a week, including overtime. Virtually 50 per cent. worked less than forty-five hours a week. The ordinary number of hours worked in time of peace was fifty hours.

These statistics, therefore, mean that half of the men in the metal and shipbuilding trades in England's great iron working district are working less than eight hours a day on a six-day week. For this showing, drink is held largely, although not entirely, responsible. Many of the best men joined the army in the early part of the war. Prolonged overtime has caused part of the present force to break down. An element of the Socialist Party also has had considerable influence on the workers by telling that the war is purely a capitalistic affair in which the workers have no direct concern.

Sunday closing has been in operation in Scotland for many years, thus cutting off the workers in the great shipbuilding yards along the Clyde from liquor for one day a week. Whether the English police possibly have grown more lax and the Scottish police more active since the war began, the fact remains that arrests for drunkenness show an increase in Scotland and a decrease in England. Lieut. Col. Ferguson, Inspector of Constabulary of Scotland, says in his report for 1914 that the cities and towns of his country show an increase of 1,665 in the number of persons arrested for drunkenness, and the country districts an increase of 899, or a total increase of 2,564.

In contrast, the great English manufacturing City of Manchester shows only 984 cases of drunkenness for January and February of this year as against 1,520 for the same month of 1914, with a corresponding falling off of crime. The London police speak of a notable decline in arrests here, and report that the arrests for drunkenness during the recent Easter holidays were the fewest on record. They also say that they have been as vigilant as ever in arresting offenders of this class.

BITTER TOWARD AMERICA.

Shipment of Arms to Allies Text for German Paper's Attack.

A bitter attack is made on the Wilson Administration in a recent issue of the Kölnische Zeitung, published in Germany, which declares that the American shipments of arms to the Allies are permitted by this Government in order to distract public attention from the domestic débacles which, it says, have attended the present Administration.

"Even such a soft-hearted idealist as the great Prince of Peace, Bryan," it says, "has only a theoretical aversion to war, now that he has learned to know its blessings for the bankbook. Besides, could fate really be kinder to the present Government than by allotting to it the present war? The people had been promised the very azure of the skies, higher wages, more work, and especially a lower cost of living. But, instead of that, there arose a great murmur in the land, and the Government had its hands full with the task of declaring the bad times merely a 'a psychological condition.' Then the war came, and there came the contracts for billions, the blessings of billions.

"And there came the pretty opportunity to confess in front of the temple: 'Lord, I thank Thee that I am not like as yon German publican there!' And they erected in the front room a Peace and Mediation Bureau and hung before the door on a placard the dove with the olive branch. But in the rear room they kept books day and night with all sorts of nice contracts for cannon and cartridges and guns, and for shrapnel and dumdum bullets, and for picric acid and trinitrates and guncotton; and they rubbed their hands ever more and more satisfied, for such a blessed year had not been experienced for a long time.

"But for the widows and orphans and the cripples that fall by the way as a by-product of this profitable American industry—well, for these they offer prayers and send out a Christmas ship with dolls and ice cream, and at Easter probably an Easter ship with candy, for they have just learned that over there a great shortage therein has arisen. The good American heart has always asserted itself, and there is only one thing in the world that sincerely pains that good heart, namely, if the dull world refuses to understand how good it really is. For, you see, even advertising is a business."

Peace Likely to Continue Till After the Garibaldi Celebration.

ROME, April 30, (via Paris, May 1.)—Great significance is attached to the fact that King Victor Emmanuel will preside at the unveiling of the monument at Quarto Sant' Elena in honor of Garibaldi and his famous Thousand, who captured Sicily in 1860. Doubt has prevailed in some Austro-German circles as to whether his Majesty would take part in the ceremonies on May 5, which are expected to assume the character of a great national demonstration, but it was said tonight there was no longer any question of his determination to do so.

This is regarded as making it certain that no grave steps will be taken by Italy within the next ten days, as the King is not expected to return to Rome until May 8.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, May 1.—The Italian press is still discussing the chances of intervention in the war, the journals of each party arguing according to their desires, but the likelihood of an Austro-Italian agreement is so remote now that it is scarcely taken into consideration.

Much attention is devoted to the reports that the Germans are using asphyxiating gases in the trenches, which caused a revulsion of feeling in the case of many who were formerly pro-German. Italians take a special interest in these reports, feeling that they may suffer from such methods of warfare in the near future.

ITALY'S RED CROSS READY.

In Case of War Rome Alone Can Care for 30,000 Wounded.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, April 17.—Italy has now, like every other civilized country, her Red Cross, which, however, is practically untried, as the peninsula has not, since her Red Cros foundation, been concerned in any great war.

The governing powers of the Italian Red Cross are divided in their opinion of what is called a defect in the organisation and may cause serious trouble in the funtioning of the association in time of war. This so-called weakness arises from the fact that the various local Red Cross branches are not branches at all, but independent associations, affiliated, of course, with one another and the Rome branch (the most important,) but in no wise depending upon Rome or controlled by her.

This, it is thought, will cause confusion in time of stress, overcrowding in some places and general want of efficiency. Venice, Verona, Padua, Bologna, Milan, Genoa, and Vicenza—indeed, all the larger towns of the north—have their Red Cross, but, as they work independentll, it is asked how they will cope with continual battles and thousands of wounded.

The Rome Croce Rossa on a war footing has 500 beds, and this number can be increased to 3,000. The military authorities have assigned 30,000 of the wounded, in case of war, to Rome, and arrangements for that number are already completed. This, of course, is far beyond the resources of the Croce Rossa, so that the staffs of all the hospitals existing in the city, military and otherwise, now emptied of their earthquake victims, will be called upon, while many private persons have offered to house a certain number of wounded.

Princess di Poggio Suasa, née Curtis of New York, has offered to take twenty into her palace, while Princess Doria will look after double that number. A curious hitch has, however, occurred in these arrangements, as almost invariably the walls of the great palaces and houses are covered with brocade or damask, which would be impossible in a sick room. Will these charitable ladies go the length of removing their priceless warr coverings?

I am informed that even the Vatican has come forward and ofered Santa Marta, a large building in the Vatican precincts, to be presided over by nuns; Tuscany will give hospitality to 50,000 wounded, and so on. Red Cross, military authorities, and civilians working together to relieve the inevitable suffering as much as possible.

The trained nurses of the Italian Red Cross number 2,000, and are drawn from the upper middle class, and, to some small extent, from the aristocracy. Duke Leopoldo Torlonia is the President; Marchesa Guiccioli, an English woman, the Vice President; the Duchess d'Aosta is on the board, and Princess Doria, also an Englishwoman, and Marchesa Monaldi, sister of Ernest Nathan, the former Mayor of Rome, are inspectors. Among the Rome nurses are daughters of doctors, Senators, Deputies, military and naval officers, civil servants, &c. General Ricciotti Garibaldi's daughter, Signorina Rosa, is a most highly prized nurse, as is the daughter of Duke Caetani.

In times of peace the Red Cross nurses have three months' practical training in a good hospital for three years running. They are all picked women, recommended by respectable householders. They are volunteers, receiving no remuneration whatever; but when they are on service—that is, war service—their maintenance and railway fare are provided.

TISZA'S VIEWS ON ITALY.

Hungarian Premier Hopes for a Peaceable Settlement.

Advices received here by The Hungarian-American Daily tell of the interview which was granted by Count Tisza, Hungarian Premier, to the correspondent of the Italian Stampa. The Premier was asked his opinion about Italy's entering the world war.

"The existing difficulties," he said, "originate in a complicated situation. But studying carefully the present circumstances and the future of the two powers, I do not give up the hope of a peaceable and friendly outcome. I am glad to emphasize the possibility of an amicable result. I am positive that an understanding will bring lasting benefits to both, for both of them should be moved by their interests to live side by side as good neighbors."

SAVOFF EN ROUTE TO RUSSIA.

Bulgarian Ex-Minister Goes on a Secret Mission.

BUCHAREST, (via London,) May 1.—General Savoff, at one time Minister of War of Bulgaria, has arrived here.

He will remain a few days and then proceed to Petrograd on a secret mission.

CHARGE WAGE DEPRESSION.

Socialist Organ Accuses Germany of Stopping Competition.

Under the title "An Extraordinary Audacity," the Berliner Vorwärts, the central organ of the German Social Democratic Party, in its issue of April 11 prints a confidential letter dated March 20, circulated by the Association of Bavarian Metal Industrialists to show that the Imperial Marine Office of Germany secretly urged that body and others in various German industries not to advertise very liberal wages for German workingmen, since by doing so they would draw workers away from the Government contracts for war supplies. The circular, addressed to members of the association, in part was as follows:

"The Secretary of State of the Imperial Marine Office, under date of Feb. 22, 1915, has suggested to the War Committee of the German Industries the proposition of asking the constituent industries to refrain from advertising for special workmen, namely, turners, locksmiths, machinists, coppersmiths, riveters, &c., through promises of high wages, because other firms who likewise have to fill war contracts will have labor forces diverted from them, and an unhealthy boosting of wages will result."

After asserting that the unrest among workers was due to employers who had competed for labor, the circular says:

"Therefore the Nürnberg Confidential Commission of the Association of Bavarian Metal Industrialists resolved on March 15, 1915, contrary to the practice of individual firms, that the direct advertisements of its members even as heretofore shall not be permitted, just as the direct use of the municipal or other employment bureaus cannot be authorized. Rather, the procuring of the necessary labor forces shall unconditionally be carried on through our own labor bureau which, in so far as it finds occasion, may also advertise."

ALLIES BOMBARD FORTS AT NAGARA

Naval Guns Prevent the Sultan's Troops from Crossing the Dardanelles.

TURKS MASSED AT MAIDOS

Main Defensive Force Is Twelve Miles from Entrance to the Strait.

LONDON, May 1.—The Athens correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company sends the following dispatch regarding operations at the Dardanelles:

"The fleet violently bombarded Nagara, but the forts did not reply.

"The Turks are unable to pass over to the Asiatic shore on account of the indirect fire of the Allies. The Turkish troops at present are concentrated around Maidos."

[Maidos is the fort on the eastern shore of the Gallipoli Peninsula, which lies nearly opposite the strongly fortified promontory of Nagara, on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles. It is about twelve miles from the entrance to the strait.]

PARIS, May 1.—The Gallipoli peninsula is gradually being cut off from the rest of Turkish Thrace, says the Athens correspondent of the Havas Agency in a dispatch dated yesterday. It now is said to be impossible for the Turks to pass from one shore to the other. Their main forces are between Gallipoli and Maidos.

French Senegalese troops are reported to be conducting themselves with the utmost valor on the Asiatic coast. They have occupied Yeni Shehr, while Nechori and Nagara are being violently bombarded.

BERLIN, May 1, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Included in the news items given out today by the Overseas News Agency is the following dispatch, dated Constantinople:

"The French soldiers who landed on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles have been expelled. The Gallipoli peninsula also has been cleared of the invaders except at Gaba Tepeh Point, where the landing detachment, under cover of the guns of the warships, is tenaciously maintaining its position on the coast.

"A terrific bombardment by the allied fleet, April 27 and 28, killed or wounded a few Turkish officers and soldiers, while the Allies lost several thousand in dead and wounded.

"In addition to the French armored cruiser Jeanne d'Arc, the British battleships Majestic, Triumph, and Vengeance were partially set on fire. Aided by tenders they slowly returned to the Island of Tenedos. They were severely damaged. Several transports and destroyers also were sunk."

A Constantinople dispatch received on Friday by way of London reported injuries to the Jeanne d'Arc, Majestic, and Triumph, but did not mention the Vengeance.

RUMANIA NOW ANTI-RUSSIAN?

Fears the Czar's Control of the Dardanelles, Vorwaerts Says.

A recent issue of the German Socialist organ Vorwärts, in discussing the political effects of the Allies' attack on the Dardenelles, asserted that it had caused a marked revulsion of feeling in Rumania against the Allies, particularly against Russia.

"The economic future of Rumania is so closely bound up with free passage through the straits,' says the paper, "that the spectre of Russian rule in Constantinople has been enough to swerve even the Russophiles in Rumania, who have heretofore agitated for a closer co-operation with Russia, for their course.

"If Take Jonescu, who has heretofore been generally regarded as the paid agent of Russia in Rumania, is now obliged to declare that Rumania's interests required the internationalization of the straits it indicates no less than a complete shifting of the forces in Rumania toward a policy that is certainly not friendly to Russia."

MOHAMMED THE VICTORIOUS

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 30, (via London, May 1.)—To celebrate his first selamlik as "Mohammed the Victorious" the Sultan of Turkey at noon today went to the Mosque of St. Sophia.

Six years ago today the Sultan celebrated his first selamlik at the same mosque, but there was a vast contrast between the hasty preparations then and today's pomp and splendor.

The only "Mohammed the Victorious" hitherto known in Turkish history was the Sultan who captured Byzantium and overthrew the Eastern Empire.

SOCIALISTS DENOUNCE WAR.

Demonstrations Held in Spain and Switzerland.

PARIS, May 1.—Socialists throughout Spain and Switzerland held large demonstrations today, denouncing the present war and militarism in general.

The meetings generally were without incident and the police were not obliged to interfere.

REVIVAL CAUSES CLASH.

Burlington Teacher Charged with Burning "Get Right with God" Emblems.

BURLINGTON, N. J., May 1. — Because a high school teacher is alleged to have ripped from the coats of pupils cards bearing the words "Get Right with God," and to have burned the emblems, a clash is threatened between school authorities and churches conducting the tabernacle revival here under auspices of David Hughes, an evangelist.

"In all my experience I never heard of such a case," said the evangelist. "If the cards had been an attack upon any denomination or religious sect the teacher would have been entirely justified, but if the facts as related are true it's high time you parents went further than to complain to a visiting evangelist."

Two Knockouts at Broadway.

Knockouts ended two of the three ten-round bouts at the Broadway Sporting Club last night. In the first ten-round bout Sailor Maher of Brooklyn was knocked out by Silent Martin of New York in the last round with only half a minute left to box. Martin weighed in at 154 pounds and Maher 149½. The bout was even all the way to the tenth, and in the last round both boxers cut loose at top speed and exchanged blows at a fast pace. Martin finally landed a stinging right swing to the jaw and Maher went down for the count. In the second bout Kid Graves of Milwaukee, weighing 143¾, outpointed Frankie Notter of New York by a wide margin. Notter weighed 130½, but his advantage of weight was no assistance to him. He was outpointed in eight of the ten rounds, and in the other two sessions the boxing was even.

In the last bout Terry Mitchell of Brooklyn made short work of Steward Donnelly of Indianapolis. Mitchell weighed 145 and Donnelly 149½. In the first round Mitchell was the aggressor, and forced Donnelly to use defensive tactics. In the second round Mitchell started off at whirlwind speed and floored Donnelly four times, the fourth time sending the Indianapolis boxer to the floor for the count.

LIBELS BRITISH STEAMER.

North German Lloyd Sues for Damages to the Kaiser Wilhelm II.

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., May 1.—An unusual Admiralty proceeding, involving ships of England and Germany, was begun today at New Orleans in the United States Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, when the North German Lloyd Steamship Company of Bremen filed a libel to recover $198,962.24 damages from the English owners of the steamship Incemore, now within the jurisdiction of the Federal Court at New Orleans. The suit grows out of the collision between the German steamship Kaiser Wilhelm II. and the British steamship Incemore, which occurred ten miles off the coast of the Isle of Wight on June 17, 1914.

The Kaiser Wilhelm II is now listed among the German vessels in New York harbor, and the Incemore is taking cargo at New Orleans.

The North German Lloyd Company has been awaiting a favorable opportunity to libel the British ship ever since the collision, and now has put its claim into the hands of a local firm of lawyers.

The collision occurred in a dense fog as the Kaiser Wilhelm II. was on her way from Southampton to Cherbourg with 1,000 passengers on board from New York. She was struck on the starboard side by the Incemore, which had her bows battered in and her anchor driven inboard by the impact. The German liner steamed back to Southampton under her own power and landed her passengers.

After undergoing repairs at Bremen, the Kaiser Wilhelm II. arrived in New York just before war was declared, and has been tied up ever since at the North German Lloyd Pier at Hoboken. Captain R. Dahl, who was in charge at the time of the collision, is in command of the liner now.

DOCTORS FREE, REARRESTED

Four Are Paroled Until Tomorrow in Museum Cases.

After an animated proceeding before Justice Hendrick in the Supreme Court yesterday Drs. Leonard Landies, Andrew Ewing, Sidney S. Engelman, and Abraham Cooperman, who were arrested recently, charged with violations of the Penal Code, were discharged from custody, immediately rearrested, and then paroled until 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, when Justice Hendrick will pass upon the merits of a writ of habeas corpus sued out by Moses H. Grossman of House, Grossman & Vorhaus immediately after their second arrest.

Assistant District Attorney Stanley W. Ritchter, protested first against their discharge and then against their rearrest on bench warrants that had been obtained. He also protested against an immediate hearing on the second arrests.

Mr. Grossman based his argument for the dismissal of the commitments on the ground that they did not specify the crime charked against the defendants. The four prisoners were said by the prosecuting officer to have been implicated in maintaining a nuisance in the maintenance of museums to which legal exception had been taken. On Friday Mr. Richter asked Justice Hendrick to sit as a committing Magistrate and not to hear the evidence. This he did and affidavits against them were presented.

George Massey.

George Massey, who died on Thursday at his home, 254 West Seventy-first Street, was the senior member of the drug firm of Lanman & Kemp. He was a son of the late Rev. Samuel Massey of Montreal, Canada, and was born in Witton, Cheshire County, England, where his ancestors had lived since its occupation by the Baron de Massey, who crossed to England with William the Conqueror. Mr. Massey was prominent among the British residents of this city and was a graduate of McGill University, a former President of the British Schools and Universities Club, and an officer of St. eGorge's Society. He was also a former Vice President of the New York College of Pharmacy and a member of the New York, Toronto and Rumson Country Clubs. Mr. Massey was a former Governor of the New York Athletic Club, and was instrumental a few years ago, in bringing Canadian Lacrosse teams to this country in order to introduce the sport here. His widow, a son, and a daughter, survive him.

Dr. Gustafson, Archaeologist, Dies.

CHRISTIANIA, April 20.—Dr. Gabriel Gustafson, the leading Norwegian archeologist, is dead at his home here, aged 62. Dr. Gustafson was born in Sweden, but came to Norway in 1889, and became head of the antiquarian section of the Bergen Museum, which, under his direction, developed into an important institution. Later he was appointed professor in the University of Christiania, where he completely reorganized the museum and directed many excavations, making many important discoveries. He was regarded as the world's greatest authority on the civilization of the Viking Age.

FINDS POLES HAPPY UNDER GERMAN RULE

Abraham Cohan Praises the Kaiser's Forces After a Trip to the War oZne.

LOOKS FOR A DEADLOCK

Doesn't Think Germany Can Be Beaten—Says America Has Lost Its Chance as Peacemaker.

Abraham Cahan, editor of The Jewish Daily Forward, was the speaker at a meeting at Carnegie Hall last night, given in his honor by the United Hebrew Trades and the East Side branches of the Socialist party in order to get the story of his investigations in the war zone, from which he returned last week.

The meeting was carried on in Yiddish and Mr. Cahan delivered his address in that language, but before he appeared on the stage he gave a summary in English to the reporters of what he was to say. He favors the German cause, but pointed out that he was born in Russia, was a Russian revolutionist, and spoke German only with difficulty.

"I spent most of my time," said Mr. Cahan, "in the region of Russian Poland, near the City of Lodz, and visited the cities, towns, and countryside of that district. That section is now held by the Germans, and I had every opportunity to compare their treatment of the natives with what had gone on when the Russians were there. The comparison is all in favor of the Germans. The people there are contented and have nothing but praise of the Kaiser's forces. I may say that for the first time in my life I saw Poles and Jews carrying on their daily tasks in the presence of soldiers without uneasiness, and these were the German soldiers.

"I carefully investigated tsories of Russian outrages, and in every case have names and dates and definite places to back up my assertion. The Russians, both officers and men, behaved vilely to the residents of the section. For instance, I talked with one widow with two daughters. One of the daughters had been attacked by Cossacks in the mother's presence. When the girl fainted they made the mother carry water to her, and after that she did not escape further molestation. The girl is now neearly demented. The other sister helped tell me the story as well as she could. In another case, in a town in Galicia, 100 women and about as many men sought refuge in their synagogue. Forty Cossacks followed, held the men outside under guard, and, joined by many companions, attacked the women inside.

"These are only a few instances. They were not sporadic outbreaks, but occurred wherever the Russian army went.

"The most significant thing I found about Germany was the moral strength which holds there. It permeates the populace and will be a very strong asset in conducting the war. There is no bluster or ranting. The German of today is a better man than he ever was. The war has done it for him, as it has for the Frenchman and the Englishman.

"It is preposterous to think of the Russians being successful in their campaign and reaching Berlin. They are a thousand years behind the times and practically negligible. The French and the English are the only ones Germany has to fear.

"To illustrate German and Russian rule, I can mention a visit to the town of Ostrowo. It is right on the frontier, a German town whose inhabitants speak Polish. It is a fine up-to-date town with all the evidences of modern comfort and cultivation. From there I stepped over the border. When you have gone as far as about twenty city blocks, you are in a region of indescribable backwardness, a region so filthy and unsanitary that there is not a place where you or I could sleep or eat. Yet exactly the same race of people is living in comfort and cleanliness only a short distance away in Ostrowo.

"Most of the people at this meeting are workingmen interested in the international socialistic movement. It has been said that the present war has disrupted the Socialist movement, because the Socialists of all nations have taken up arms and are fighting each other. But that is not true. The Socialists have indeed taken up arms, because they felt that the war was inevitable. But they believe at its close the movement will have a stronger impulse than ever because the world will have been cleansed of certain forces incompatible with international Socialist ideals.

"They realize that the world will be utterly sick of the war of commercialism, which this conflict represents. There could be no such war under socialism.

"There is just one reason why the German Socialists joined the conflict and are with the Kaiser, whom normally they are against. It is because, they said, 'If we start at this time to make trouble for our country, we are only playing into the hands of savage Russia.' They do not believe that there would have been a war if Russia had not been involved. At least, they would not have supported it. But if Russia was a country up with modern civilization, as France and Germany are, there would have been no trouble.

"I am not in the prophecy business and so cannot say how the war will end. I cannot think Germany will be beaten. I think it will end in a deadlock. I hope so. When overtures of peace come, they will not come from Germany or any of the big nations involved. They will come from some small country. America has lost her chance at it by supplying arms to Germany's foes."

FEARS FOR A BELGIAN BISHOP

Paris Has a Report That Germans Will Arrest Mgr. Heylen.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 1.—The Journal de Débats's Havre correspondent says the Belgium authorities expect the arrest by the Germans of Mgr. Heylen, Bishop of Namur, because of his refutation of the German statement that Belgian priests incited the peasants to attack the Germans or became francstireurs themselves.

Mgr. Heylen sent a protest against these assertions to General von Bissing, contradicting them in detail, and further asserting that the Germans stole twenty-four robes from an abbey near Dinant and wore them for a considerable time, thus causing false rumors about the priests' behavior.

The Belgian officials say the Germans are furious at Mgr. Heylen's independent tone and are likely to arrest him immediately.

lating to the appointment of Japanese as political, financial, and military advisers in China, if she could be recompensed by an acceptance by China of some of the main articles asking for special privileges in Mongolia, many of which the Chinese have thus far refused. If Japan could obtain absolute domination of inner Mongolia, the belief was expressed in some quarters that some of the demands in the so-called general group would be waived.

It is known, however, that Japan will continue, at all events, to insist on an acceptance of her demands for railway rights included in Group V, as well as the article relating to the purchase of arms and ammunition by China in Japan. The Japanese not only are anxious to stimulate their own industries in the manufacture of arms and open up a nearby market, but it is said by well-informed Japanese officials that Japanese firms are anxious also to obtain contracts for the sale to Chinese soldiers of uniforms exactly like those worn by the Japanese troops.

One of the most important demands in Group V, which China now has rejected, and of peculiar interest to American missionaries, is that asking for the right to discuss at a future date the propagation of Buddhism in China. The Japanese many years ago endeavored to introduce that form of worship into China on an extensive scale, but the Chinese Dynasty refused to permit it.

While the Japanese attach much importance to the question, persons familiar with the course of Far Eastern diplomacy said it would not be surprising if, to placate American and European opposition, the entire question finally was left untouched, especially should the Chinese agree to some of the other demands regarded as more important by Japan.

It was generally believed here that the rejection by China of Group V would be followed by further conferences and an endeavor to reconstruct the series of articles along lines more acceptable to China.

Secretary Bryan continued today his policy of absolute silence on the Japanese-Chinese question, but it is assumed in diplomatic quarters here that both the United States and Great Britain are quietly exerting influence toward a satisfactory adjustment of the situation by compromises.

TO DEMAND NAGEL INQUIRY.

Brotherhood Will Ask Congress to Investigate His Appointment.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 1.—A Congressional inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the selection of Charles Nagel as a neutral member of the Board of Arbitration which sat in the controversy between the ninety-eight Western railroads and their 64,000 engineers, firemen, and hostlers is to be demanded by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

The brotherhoods plan to ask how the former Secretary of Commerce and Labor happened to be named as an arbitrator, who vouched for him and why, when it was known to the Federal Board of Mediation and Conciliation that he represente dinterests that were financially concerned in the welfare of the roads involved in the controversy.

The demand for a Congressional inquiry was practically agreed upon today at an all-day secret conference of the 100 general Chairmen of the brotherhood locals representing all the roads. The conferees decided that the award as handed down on Friday by the Board of Arbitration was a joke, and the five months' arbitration a farce. The Chairmen declared they had "played in a game with the cards stacked against them," and that Mr. Nagel was the "stacked card." They sai dthe wage increase didn't "amount to car fare." In spite of this, they practically unanimously agreed to abide by the award and file no protest.

Plans were laid for the coming year, and it is certain the wage question will come up again before that time. Chairmen who came out of the session were almost as one in declaring that they would agree to no further arbitrations, and that the controversies would be settled on some other basis at the end of the year.

Mr. Nagel was not charged with dishonesty in any way by the brotherhood chiefs, despite the fact that at the conference it wa selicited from F. A. Burgess and Timothy Shea, the two labor representatives on the board, that he had voted against the men on practically every question, although on the board as a neutral. One labor leader attributed his votes to "class consciousness."

Warren S. Stone, Grand Chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, following today's conference, made this significant statement:

"Some one is going to answer to the labor unions for the appointment of Mr. Nagel as a neutral arbitrator. Who is to make the answer we don't know, but we are going to know before we get through."

RESCUE ELEVEN SAILORS.

Crew of the Victoria Picked Up—West Coast Storm Subsides.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., May 1.—Eleven members of the crew of the steamship Victoria which foundered off the Coronada Islands on Friday, were picked up by the schooner Flyer today. They had taken to the lifeboats just before the Victoria sank.

The men chose to remain on the leaking vessel, hoping to save her, when the fifteen passengers were taken off last night by the American-Hawaiian steamer American.

The men suffered from exhaustion and exposure during their voyage in the open boats, but none was in a serious condition.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 1.—The Pacific Coast storm which sent the steamer Victoria to the bottom disabled the liner Northern Pacific, damaged the passenger steamer Harvard, and kept scores of vessels, big and little, out at sea for many hours, had subsided tonight.

Two big steamers, the Pennsylvania and the J. L. Luckenbach, and a stream of small craft have come into port.

The Northern Pacific, which with 150 passengers aboard, has been drifting before the storm off Point Arena, one hundred miles north of here, sent word late today that the steam steering gear which was disabled, had been repaired and she was expected to come into port under her own power.

Anxiety is being felt regarding the Norwegian ship Aggi, which left here Thursday in tow of the steamer Edgar H. Vance. Yesterday, during the storm, the towing line broke, and since then the Aggi has been adrift and no word has come from her.

TO PAY 165 NEW POLICEMEN.

Mayor Allows Aldermen's Grant to Go Through Without Approval.

Mayor Mitchel returned yesterday to the Board of Aldermen without approval or disapproval its grant of $165,000 in special revenue bonds to provide for 165 more policemen. This gives Commissioner Woods the right to go ahead and appoint the new patrolmen from the civil service list.

In the same way the Police Commissioner obtained the right to spend $12,000 for bicycles, each of which must cost not more than $25, and $13,000 for motor cycles, each of which must cost not more than $200. They are to be used in the outer districts, and each machine will do away with a horse.

GERMANY'S 'BURNING LAKE.'

American Says He Saw Demonstration of Gases Four Years Ago.

C. R. Lynch, an American who has been touring the Continent for the last few years introducing American business and amusement ideas, returned to this city yesterday and told of having witnessed experiments by the Germans with their deadly asphyxiating gases which they used with remarkable effect against the Allies recently in the fighting in Flanders.

"About four years ago," said Mr. Lynch, "I had arranged to build a Dreamland park near Berlin. I had raised the capital and secured the site. The German police officials insisted, however, that all the structures should be of steel and concrete. Just then Dreamland at Coney Island burned down, and the police said they did not want anything like that in the neighborhood of Berlin, and the project had to be given up.

"But while I was getting the site I was invited one day to witness an exhibition of a new invention of a German engineer named Fiedler. He called it a 'burning lake,' and it was his idea to use it for amusement purposes. Fiedler claimed he had rediscovered the lost secret of the ancient 'Greek fire.'

"We took a train from Berlin and rode an hour to a place whose name I was not told. We drove through a forest until dark, when suddenly we came to a clearing in the woods. Here there was some sort of small engine, which they did not allow me to approach, and they would not let me see anything except the end of a hose. At a signal, the hose began to spurt a stream of fire in the air. The heat was such that I could not approach within 200 feet of the nozzle. They turned the hose upon a small stream that was near, and soon for quite a distance the surface of the stream was ablaze. The inventor said that he had set fire to boats by setting the water afire near them, and letting the current and the wind carry the blaze in their direction.

"The invention had been demonstrated three times before the Kaiser himself. I was so impressed with the invention that I immediately made a proposition for the American rights of it. I was told there were no American rights, for the German Government had forbidden that the invention should be shown outside of the country. When the descriptions were published of the attack on French trenches with liquid fire, I recognized the invention I had seen demonstrated near Berlin about four years ago."

HOW WAR HAS CUT TRADE WITH EUROPE

Net Loss in Nine Months of Fiscal Year $34,725,231, Despite Larger Exports.

FALLING OFF OF IMPORTS

And Exports to Germany Almost Down to the Vanishing Point—No Trade at All with Austria.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—An analysis of our foreign commerce during March, which was completed today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, shows many significant trade consequences of the war in Europe. For one thing, American exports to Germany in March amounted to only $283,816, as against $28,213,120 in March last year. For nine months of this fiscal year, down to the end of March, this country imported from Germany a great deal more than it has exported to that country. The total imports were $83,708,578, while the exports were $28,861,187, the total trade with Germany for the nine months being $112,569,765, whereas it was in the same nine months of the last fiscal year $434,370,281, nearly four times as much.

Similarly it appears that American trade with Europe has also fallen off in the grand total, notwithstanding the heavy increase in the shipment of foodstuffs, arms, and munitions of war. Imports from all Europe, which were $678,483,473 last year, were $480,995,245 for the nine months covered by today's statement, a falling off of $197,488,228. Exports to Europe for the nine months of the last fiscal year, ended with March, 1914, were $1,208,540,091, and this fiscal year were $1,371,203,016, a gain of $162,762907. The net loss of European trade has been $34725231.

The imports of March, 1915, as compared with those of a year ago show a los. The total then was $182,55,304, as against $158,022,016 this year. Exports in March, 1915, however, were greatly in excess of those of a year ago, being $292,250,231, as against $183,934,601 in March, 1914.

In the item of miscellaneous exports there was a total shipment in March last of horses to the value of $8,088,974, and of mules to the value of $1,255,759. In the miscellaneous column also appears the export of seeds to the value of $408,513.

March exports have increased this year over March a year ago as follows: France, $13,511,436, to $40,647,375; Italy, $6,047,752, to $23,530,522; Netherlands, $8,953,409, to $23,386,506; Great Britain, $43,848,656, to $93,384,652.

The falling off in imports on account of the war is also striking. Import figures for March, 1914, as compared with those for March, 1915, are: Austria-Hungary, $1,851,014 to $904,127; Belgium, $4,352,294 to $254,218; France, $12,627,190 to $6,878,977; Germany, $16,799,063 to $7,984,115; Italy, $5,661,336 to $4,236,037; Netherlands, $3,593,912 to $1,662,939; Russia in Europe, $2,379,488 to $19,163; Great Britain, $27,448,619 to $21,828,430.

American export trade to Austria was extinguished this year, not a dollar's worth of goods being shipped to that country from the United States. Last year the export valuation was $1,661,000.

ASSERTS HE'S AMBASSADOR.

Former Interpreter at Mexican Consulate Fined in Night Court.

Louis Mulino, 30 years old, of the Union Square Hotel, an interpreter formerly attached to the Mexican Consul's office at 17 Battery Place, was arraigned in the Men's Night Court last night on a charge of disorderly conduct.

Policeman Noble of the Greenwich Street Station, testified that Mulino had caused a disturbance in the Whitehall building in the afternoon and refused to leave.

Mulino denied his guilt and asserted that he was the Mexican Ambassador to the United States with a salary of $1,000 a month. Magistrate Ten Eyck found him guilty and imposed a fine of $10. The fine was not paid.

MAYOR GOING ON VACATION.

Starts Today for Trip of Five Weeks in the West.

Mayor Mitchel will leave New York today on a five weeks' vacation in the West. He held yesterday a conference with the heads of the city departments. In that he enjoined on his Commissioners the importanec of beginning immediately the preparation of their statements of budget requirements and of remembering that strict economy was necessary.

If it was necessary for any department to take on new men the Mayor asked the Commissioners to select as far as possible men who had been laid off by other city departments.

GIRL, 3, DIES FROM BURNS.

Clothing of Judge Cabell's Daughter Caught Fire from Stove.

Special to The New York Times.

PASSAIC, N.J., May 1.—District Court Judge Walter C. Cabell and his wife were upstairs after supper this evening when they heard their 4-year-old daughter Alice racing through the lower floor of their home, which is the old Peter Reid mansion, at Passaic and Aycrigg Avenues, calling for help. Ainsworth Hird, a mill owner, whose place adjoins the mansion, and who was in his yard, heard the cries also, and when Judge Cabell hurried downstairs he found Hird rolling 3-year-old Grace Cabell in his coat. The child's clothing had caught fire at a gas stove in the kitchen, and she was terribly burned.

An ambulance was called and the child was hurried to St. Mary's Hospital, where she died a few hours later. Her parents were almost prostrated by shock. Small Alice couldn't tell much what happened except that her sister had got too near the stove and she, seeing Grace in flames, had fled screaming.

CARMAN TRIAL ON MONDAY.

Neighbor as Important New Witness for Prosecution.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 1.—The second trial of Mrs. Florence Carman for the alleged murder of Mrs. Lulu D. Bailey in the office of Dr. Edwin Carman in Freeport on June 30, 1914, is scheduled to begin on Monday, and District Attorney Lewis J. Smith has admitted that he has several new witnesses. One of these is said to be a neighbor of the Carmans who will tell of incidents immediately preceding the shooting of Mrs. Bailey.

The shot was fired from outside the house through a window into the physician's office. This witness is said to have had a view of the lawn outside this window.

Justice Abel E. Blackmar will preside at the trial and he will decide whether Mrs. Carman shall be detained in jail or left at liberty under bail while the trial progresses. Mrs. Carman's lawyers say they will fight any attempt to jail their client.

Arrest Presser on Murder Charge.

Lieutenant Hennessy and Detective Wuchsner of Headquarters arrested a man in Bayonne, N. J., last night who described himself as Isidore Presser, 22 eyears old, of 8 Pitt Street, on a charge of complicity in the murder of Morris Rosenthal on March 11 last in front of 85 Allen Street in a feud between rival bands of strikebreakers. Extradition will be asked.

EDITOR CAUGHT AS PEDDLER

Arrested Selling South American Trade Magazine in Wall Street.

A tall distinguished looking man, who was arrested yesterday for peddling without a license, said he was J. P. Santamrina, a professor of commercial science, geography, jurisprudence, and philology, a public lecturer for the Board of Education, President of the Spanish Inter-American Immigration Protective Association, former editor of L'Argentine and La Prensa, leading South American newspapers, ex-Justice of the Peace in the Argentine, special Argentine envoy to the first commercial conference of the Pan-American Union at Washington, and export trade counsel and secretary of the Inter-American movement which has offices at 1 Broadway.

Policeman Stanley, of the Old Slip Station told Magistrate Marsh in the Tombs Court he had seen the defendant standing upon a soap box at Broad and Wall Streets, addressing 500 persons, while a youthful assistant went among the crowd selling a publication called The South American. Stanley said that the assistant had stopped selling when warned, but Mr. Santamarina subsequently had sold a copy to a boy for ten cents.

Mr. Santamarina said the proceeds of the sales of the magazine published in the interests of closer trade relations between the United States and South America, were devoted to charitable purposes.

"I shall see the Police Commissioner about this," he said. "If the I. W. W., who are against all Government, can speak, why cannot I?"

"Will promise not to sell any more before you obtain a license?" asked the Magistrate.

"Yes," replied Mr. Santamarina.

Mr. Santamarina was arrested three days ago on a similar charge. He was discharged by Magistrate Ten Eyck in the Tombs Court.

TIES UP $3,000,000 ESTATE.

Mrs. Hitchcock's Will Defers Payment of Bequests Eight Years.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 1.—An unusual proceeding was begun today, when Surrogate Sawyer was asked to put a legal construction on a clause in the will of Mrs. Clara F. Hitchcock, who left an estate valued at $3,000,000, in which she set forth that none of the bequests should be paid until eight years after her death.

Mrs. Hitchcock, who was the widow of Welcome G. Hitchcock, died at Scarsdale on Jan. 9. Under her will, which was admitted to probate this morning, charity, religious societies, churches, relatives, and servants receive large sums which are now held up by the odd clause.

James Heavey of 18 Summit Avenue, White Plains, who was coachman for the Hitchcock family for a quarter of a century, receives $10,000, while to the Hitchcock Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church of Scarsdale is left $25,000, in addition to $25,000 given by Mr. Hitchcock. The New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the White Plains Hospital, the White Plains Y. M. C. A., and other institutions are beneficiaries.

When the will was offered for probate objections were filed by August C. Reimer and Henry C. Reimer, nephews, of Denver, Col., both heirs. They asked the Surrogate to determine the validity of the will as far as the eight years clause was concerned.

CELEBRATE DEWEY VICTORY.

Daniels Congratulates Admiral on Anniversary of Manila Bay Battle.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The victory of Admiral George Dewey over the Spanish squadron in Manila Bay on May 1, 1898, was celebrated tonight at a dinner at the Army and Navy Club, which was attended by Admiral Dewey and a considerable number of the officers who participated in the engagement. This evening the following radio message was received by Admiral Dewey from the Secretary of the Navy, who is with the Atlantic fleet at Hampton Roads, Va.:

ON BOARD THE MAYFLOWER.

Admiral Dewey, General Board, Washington:

Upon this, the anniversary of your victory, the fleet assembled at Hampton Roads joins me in cordial felicitations. All sincerely hope you may be vouchsafed many more years of active service to your greatful country.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Officers of the navy from out of town who came here for the dinner called on the Admiral at his office today and offered their congratulations. Admiral Dewey was 77 years old on Dec. 26 last. By a special act of Congress he retains his rank on the active list, although fifteen years past the regular age for retirement, and attends constantly to his important duties as President of the General Board of the Navy.

SCHOOL STRIKE PATCHED UP

All Due to Pupils' Baseball Star Being Called "Thick-Headed."

RED BANK, N. J., May 1.—John Shea is short stop of the Red Bank High School baseball team. The team holds the pennant of the East Jersey High School League, and it expects to win the flag agai nthis year. On Thursday the star shortstop failed to comprehend something, and in a moment of laughing exasperation Miss Anna Dearborn, the instructor in charge, called him a "thick-headed Irishman."

Despite the laugh John took offense and threatened to leave school and not return. That alarmed the baseball team and the alarm spread to the rest of the boys. Yesterday sixty of them struck. They marched out and refused to go back. Late in the day they were wiser and sent a committee comprising William Matthews, William Whiting, and Eugene Newman to see the Principal, George H. Harden. He met the committee and talked matters over with the boys.

As a result on Monday morning all the boys are to be in their places, and Miss Dearborn will explain she meant no real reflection upon the shortstop, and the boys will tell how sorry they are fo rhaving been unruly. Mr. Harden is to deliver a lecture that will have as its burden the need of self-restraint and diplomacy and the need of obedience.

FINLAND'S SAILING DELAYED.

Carries 9,000 Tons of Cargo for San Francisco Via Canal.

The sailing of the Panama-Pacific liner Finland, with 460 tourists for San Francisco via the Canal, was delayed forty-five minutes on account of the clearance papers not arriving from the Custom House in time. The ship left her pier at 10 o'clock in the morning and anchored off the Statue of Liberty, where the papers were taken off to her by a tug from the Battery.

In addition to her crowd of American tourists going to the Fair, the Finland had 9,000 tons of cargo in the hold. This included a big consignment of Minnesota flour which the shippers asserted was a cheaper method of sending it to California than having it carried by freight trains over the Rocky Mountains.

Three delegates from Salvador to the Pan-American Financial Conference, to be held in Washington on May 24, arrived here yesterday on the Santa Clara from Acajutla, via the Panama Canal. They are Alfonso Quinones, Vice President of the republic; Joseph Suay, former Minister of Finance, and Roberto Aguilar, a banker. The Santa Clara was the first steamship to bring passengers and mails direct from San Salvador to New York.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, May 1.—Urging that the neutral countries should immediately offer continuous mediation to the warring powers, Miss Julia Grace Wales of the University of Wisconsin, seconded by a representative of the parties to the conflict, secured the unanimous and enthusiastic indorsement of a plan for mediation without armistice of which she is the author and that has already been submitted to President Wilson by the Wisconsin Legislature in a special memorial.

By vote of the conference an international committee or congress of women is to sit throughout the peace negotiations, which in the end must be carried on by the powers when the conflist ceases, with a view to bringing the pressureo f public opinion to bear in the direction of securing a settlement that will if possible prevent the recurrence of war.

The congress also voted to send a committee of women from neutral and belligerent countries to the capitals of Europe and the United States to lay before them an apepal based upon the resolutions adopted by the congress. Future organized co-operations on the part of the international woman's movement is assured by the creation of a permanent International Woman's Peace Committee.

The congress, which came to a close at 2:30 o'clock this afternon with interest unabated, has bene wondergul and inspiring. Many hundreds of letters and telegrams from women all over the world, for the most part approving and in some cases protesting against holding of an international garering, showed the universal interest in the meeting.

The closing session will long be remembered, replete as it was with obvious manifestations of international good-will and woman's solidarity. Those most cautious and fearful lest the congress prove an unwise step were loudest in their congratulations upon its successful issue.

THE HAGUE, May 1, (via London.)—The International Congress of Women concluded its sessions here today. At the final meeting there was adopted a proposal to send delegations representing the congress to the President of the United States and to the heads of all the European powers, for the purpose of demanding immediate cessation of the war.

Mrs. Rosika Schwimmer, President of the Hungarian Womans' Suffrage Association, moved this resolution. She was confronted with the shapest opposition, in furtherance of which many parliamentary technicalities were resorted to. This precipitated a clash which threw the gathering into the greatest confusion.

"We are here not only to talk, but to show the way to action," said Mrs. Schwimmer. "We wish to take positive steps to end this terrible war."

Mrs. Fannie Andrews of Boston read a manifesto covering all the oints dealt with by the Congress. This manifesto, which will be issued among women throughout the civilized world, declares that "this must be the last war."

The resolution referring to fortifications, which was passed yesterday, was modified today so that it now rovides simply that the seas shall be open to all nations on equal terms.

On the conclusion of the Congress many of the delegates left The Hague immediately. The American delegates scattered, various members leaving for Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, France, England, or other countries.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—A peace greeting to the women of the world from the Norwegian Women's Peace Association was delivered at the White House today by H. H. Bryan, Norwegian Minister to the United States, who asked that it be communicated to President Wilson.

The greeting, embodying resolutions adopted at a meeting of Norwegian women at Nobelhouse, Christiania, averred that "the dogma of the necessity of war must be overthrown."

ARREST FOUR AS ABDUCTORS

A woman and three men were arrested last evening in an apartment at 22½ Catherine Street on the charge of abducting Mary Noevilli, 14 years old, daughter of Raphael Noevilli, 56 Mulberry Street.

Detectives McKenna and Haskin of Police Headquarters and Agent Feeny of the Society for Prevention of Crueity to Children, had the beat the men into submission after forcing the door. The prisoners, Mary Greco, 18 years old; Ernest Preato, Nicholas Alpillio, and Rocco Crecaroni, were locked up at Headquarters.

Mary Noevilli was returning from scholo on Thursday afternoon when accosted, she said, by Charles Fileo, 20 years old, of 67 James Street, who lured her to the Catherine Street place, where she was held a prisoner until Friday night when seh escaped. McKenna caught Fileo at 2:30 yesterday morning as he was entering the James Street house. Fileo was held in $2,000 bail in the Tombs Court for examination on May 4.

LECTURES GROW IN FAVOR.

Attendance at School Course Larger by 125,000 Last Year.

"Attendance at the lectures of the Board of Education has increased by 125,000 this last year over that of the year previous," said Dr. Henry M. Leipziger, Supervisor of Lectures, at the twenty-fifth reunion of Public Lecturers of the board at the Hotel Astor last evening. Dr. Leipziger told of the care with which arrangements for the lectures were made. He spoke of the great demand for the continuance of the lectures when there had been a suggestion of their discontinuance. He told of a man who said that, with three of his children acting as school teachers, he had felt his mental disadvantage until he had educated himself by attendance at the lectures.

"The working day has been reduced a full fifth within the last half a dozen years," said Dr. Leipziger, "and this means a vast increase in the possibilities for adult education."

He told of three reading clubs that had been formed to discuss the subjects of the lectures and read original papers, and said he hoped a chain of such clubs would be extended through the city.

Victory Luncheon for Mrs. Einstein.

Mrs. William Einstein was the guest at a "Victory" luncheon on Friday at Delmonico's, given by the Board of Directors of the Widowed Mothers' Fund Association in recognition of the successful outcome of the work to which she has given many years of effort—the passage of a widowed mothers' pension measure by the New York Legislature. There was an address by Mrs. I. Lewi, Mrs. Henry Zuckerman presented a box of toilet articles from the Board, and other speakers were Mrs. Samuel Ekeles, Mrs. Samuel Koenig, and Mrs. I. Crane. Mrs. Harry Kraft sang a solo and Mrs. Charles Oppenheim read a poem written by Miss Annette Kohn.

TO MANAGE CARYL ESTATE.

Mrs. Agnes Gourreau Asks to be Made the Administratrix.

The half-a-million-dollar estate left by Mrs. Elisabeth Jumel Caryl, who died on Tuesday at her home, 8 Caryl Avenue, Yonkers, must be disposed of in the courts. Thomas F. Curran, Corporation counsel of Yonkers and attorney for Mrs. Agnes Gourreau, granddaughter of Mrs. Caryl, applied to Surrogate Sawyer at White Plains yesterday for her appointment as administratrix of the estate. eH said relatives had been unable to find a will. There are only three heirs to the property, one a granddaughter in France, a granddaughter in a convent in England, and Mrs. Gorreau, who came from France two years ago, and had since lived with Mrs. Caryl.

Mrs. Caryl was born in the Jumel mansion, and she was the grandniece of Mme. Jumel. She and her husband moved to Yonkers twenty-two years ago. They purchased property north of Van Cortlandt Park, comprising a large area. Her estate includes a part of this property.

Some of her estate consists of personal effects inherited from Mme. Jumel. In the unpretentious three-story, old-fashioned frame house where Mrs. Caryl lived these treasures have been stored for years. Among them are said to be a manuscript letter written by Napoleon to Josephine, rare Colonial relics, letters and documents from Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and Burr, and ancient furniture, paintings, and furnishings of great value.

HONOR MEDAL TO EDISON.

Civic Forum to Award It to Him for Distinguished Public Service.

Thomas A. Edison has been voted the American who has done the most to benefit mankind and is to receive the Civic Forum Medal of Honor for distinguished public service. This Medal of Honor, which was established to give recognition on the part of the rank and file of the American people to that one of their countrymen who, in ways of peace, performs some signal public service, was first awarded last year. Colonel George W. Goethals was the recipient. The medal will be presented to Mr. Edison at a public reception in Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening.

At the reception Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University will preside. The speakers will include Guglielmo Marconi, Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz, Dr. Charles C. Maclaurin, President of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Charles A. Coffin. Percy Mackaye will read a poem written by him for the occasion.

The medal, which is to be presented to Mr. Edison, is from a design by Paul H. Manship, the young American sculptor, whose genius has been recognized by the great masters of the present day.

TO SAVE GIRL'S GOOD NAME.

Husband Fights Divorce Suit in Defense of Co-respondent.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 1.—"Solely to defend the good name and unimpeachable character of an innocent young woman," is the reason given by Frank T. Reed, Sr., of Park Ridge for his action today in denying the charges against him in the divorce papers filed by his wife Sara, and filing a cross-petition, naming Adoph H. Barkerding as co-respondent.

"It was wrong of my wife to name Miss Bertha Dorries as a co-respondent in her divorce proceedings against me, for this young woman stands high in social circles in Park Ridge and never was a breath of scandal ever uttered against her," said Mr. Reed today. "For some time I have suspected my wife and had accused her on several occasions, but never had sufficient evidence. After the case was started by my wife certain people in Park Ridge became so incensed about Miss Dorries being named, owing to the fact that her character is unimpeachable, that they said they were willing to appear as witnesses in order to substantiate their statements to me involving my wife."

All the parties concerned are connected with the Mittag & Volger carbon paper plant at Park Ridge. Mr. Barkerding is a Vice President of the company. Mr. Reed is an expert cloth cutter. Mrs. Reed and Miss Dorries are stenographers in the office, working side by side. A few weeks ago Miss Dorries fell and broke her arm, and even after naming Miss Dorries as co-respondent, Mrs. Reed called at her home to express sympathy and hope for her quick recovery. The two still work side by side in the factory office.

The Reeds have been separated for some time, Mrs. Reed returning to the home of her parents at Woodcliff Lake. Mr. Reed is a brother of Ex-Postmaster Reed.

EVICTS SILK MILL STRIKERS.

Company at Summit, N. J., to Oust Twenty-four Families.

Special to The New York Times.

SUMMIT, N. J., May 1.—Notice to vacate their homes within thirty days was served today by Constable John F. Gannon on twenty-four families of strikers occupying houses in Weaver Street owned by the Summit Silk Company. All claim to have paid their rent promptly. Although there have been strikes at the mill before, this is said to be the first time that the company has put the strikers out of its houses.

The notices came as a surprise, as a citizens' committee recently appointed by Mayor Francis H. Bergen had been taking the testimony of strikers and company officials with a view to an early settlement of the trouble. The strikers now threaten to disregard the report of the committee unless its findings favor every claim they have advanced. Supt. Dorgeval of the Summit Mills said the purpose of the notices was to cause the evicted strikers to leave the city unless the labor troubles were settled within thirty days.

W. F. Goodman Left $125,000.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWTON, N. J., May 1.—By the will of former Postmaster William F. Goodman, formerly publisher of The Sussex Register, $10,000 is left to Christ Episcopal Church as a Margaret Stewart Parish House fund. It was at the home of Mrs. Stewart, who died about three years ago, that Mr. Goodman, who was a bachelor, boarded. He leaves to Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., a fund to create the George F. Goodman scholarship, in memory of his brother. The income is to be paid to a student who intends to train for the ministry. To George F. Shelton, a cousin, is left $10,000, while $5,000 goes to William A. Davies of Pasadena, Cal., a friend. The residue is left to four cousins, Emily Wright of Cambridge, Mass.; Anna G. Plumb of New Milford, Conn., and Richard J. Goodman of Hartford. Mr. Goodman left $125,000.

IN NEW JERSEY.

WEST ORANGE.—According to figures compiled by the Board of Education, there are twenty-six nationalities represented in this town. Americans lead, with Italians second and Germans third. Then follow fifty-six occupations, the greatest number being carpenters, with machinists second, hatters third, and employes of the Edison works fourth.

BARNEGAT.—The body of a man floated ashore at Highland Beach Friday night. The man was well dressed and had what seems to be a gold watch in his pocket, but nothing to identify him. The body had been in the water five or six days.

TRENTON.—Five former employes of the Fairview School for Deficient Children at Wilburtha brought suit here yesterday against Dr. Madeleine A. Hallowell, head of the institution, to recover $781, alleged to be due in salaries. The persons suing are Miss Tamar A. Oberly, nurse and assistant; Miss Amy Perkins, nurse; Miss Gertrude A. Randall, physical director; Mrs. Amy Roberts, assistant, and William S. Roberts.

ATLANTIC CITY.—The recall movement against Mayor William Riddle was brought to an abrupt halt last night. Pressure of the business interests succeeded in quelling the strife because of the harmful effects on the Summer patronage.

BIG MEXICAN ARMIES IN FIRST SKIRMISH

Both Sides Claim Success, Villa Reporting That 600 Carranza Men Were Killed.

ANGELES IN THE FOREFRONT

New Wireless System to Link Villa's Divided Territory—Money Riots in Yucatan.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Advices received from Vera Cruz today by the Carranza confidential agency stated that the great battle between the armies of Generals Obregon and Villa was expected to begin in the neighborhood of Leon, between Irapuato and Aguascalientes, today. It stated that some of General Obregon's troops which went up to Leon yesterday in order to explore the way had an encounter with Villista cavalry and defeated the latter.

According to an official Villa statement received early today on the border, a series of minor skirmishes between the forces of General Villa and General Obregon culminated in a sharp fight on Thursday, in which the Villa adherents were victorious. The statement said that 600 Carranza and 140 Villa soldiers were killed in the battle between two Villa brigades and the Obregon advance near Trinidad. Obregon's troops are said to have retired to Silao.

According to statements by persons arriving at El Paso from Aguascalientes, General Angeles, commander of the Villa artillery, has moved his cannon as far south as Leon.

The State Department was informed today that a wireless station was being erected in the City of Durango, and that it is expected by the Villa Government that when completed it will be able to communicate with the stations in Torreon, Mazatlan, and Juarez and possibly with the station at Chapultepec, Mexico.

General Villa ordered the building of this station, and the work will be under the supervision of the State Government. It has not been yet determined whether the public will be permitted to use the service, but it is thought that it will probably be restricted to Government and military messages. It is stated that as the construction company has guaranteed communication with the City of Juarez, a distance of 350 miles from Durango, communication should be easily maintained with Mexico City, which is only 475 miles in a straight line. Torreon and Mazatlan are 140 miles from Durango east and west, respectively.

The Department was advised today that the Benito Juarez left Acapulco on April 27, and that she cleared for San Diego to take a permanent American register.

Advices to Secretary Bryan from Yucatan stated that a slight disturbance ocurred there recently over the redemption of counterfeit currency, it being stated by the Alvarado administration that the value of this currency should be collected from the source of issues. The disturbance was quieted by the police. There have recently been a number of shipments of sisal from the port of Progreso.

The Mother Superior of the College of St. Teresa of Winona, Minn., made an offer recently to educate a number of young Mexican women, and it is stated in a mail dispatch to Mr. Bryan just received from Señoritas Maria Gutierrez and Natalia Rubio have decided to accept this offer. They belong to prominent families.

'LETTERS ARE FABRICATIONS.'

Villa Agent Says Carranza Consul Used Names of Diaz and Limentour.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The following statement was given to the Washington bureau of THE NEW YORK TIMES this evening by the confidential agency of the Villa or Mexican Convention Government in Washington:

"The confidential agency has learned that the letters issued by the Carranza agency in New York, and published in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday as having been received by General Felipe Angeles from Porfirio Diaz, and by Francisco Leon de la Barra from José Limantour are the fabrications of a Carranza Consul on the west coast of the United States.

"The letter from Diaz is dated 'Paris, June 18, 1913,' and addressed to 'General Felipe Angeles, Havana, Cuba.' The fact is that on June 18, 1913, and for some time after, General Angeles was a prisoner by orders of Huerta in the penitentiary in Mexico City. Enrique C. Llorente was imprisoned with him, and has personal knowledge that he was not allowed to receive mail. The Carranzistas claim to have obtained the letters at Calexico, following a visit of General Angeles never has visited that city.

"Furthermore, even if General Angeles had received the letters, which he has personally denied to this agency, the confidential agency fails to perceive what evidence they furnish of any secret alliance between General Angeles and the reactionaries."

Cut Boating Rates in Prospect Park.

Beginning yesterday the price for rowboats on Prospect Park Lake was only half what it had been in previous years. Instead of fifty cents an hour for two persons, the charge was cut to twenty-five cents, with ten cents extra for each additional person. New boats have been put in to handle the large crowds, and still more will be added very shortly. An attractive rustic pavilion and boat landing is being built on the peninsula, and when that is finished boats may be rented from that side of the lake as well as from the large boat house. The new pavilion will be used in Winter to help in accommodating the skaters.

RARE STAMPS ARE SOLD.

$125,000 Chapman Collection Is Bought by J. A. Kleeman.

The stamp world is interested in the sale just made by Clarence E. Chapman of Oakland, N. J., of his famous collection of postmasters', carriers' and United States stamps to John A. Kleeman. The amount of the purchase cannot be learned, but the net value of the collection is put at $125,000. It was completed as far as he could do so by Mr. Chapman, and he will now take up some other branch of philately.

There are in all about 7,000 stamps contained in five volumes. At the International Philatelic Exhibition of 1913 he was awarded a gold medal for his United States issues and another gold medal for his postmasters' and carriers' stamps. It was from his collection, in the closing hours of the exhibition, that two rare stamps of the 1869 issue with inverted medallions were stolen. They have never been recovered.

Among the postmasters' stamps are the Annapolis, the Baltimore, (five,) Brattleborough, Millbury, Mass., red and blue; three plates of the St. Louis stamps, with additional blocks of the 20-cent and the 5-cent retouched on greenish and gray lilac paper; the New Haven and the Tuscumbia. His carriers' stamps are the most complete lot in existence. Some of the copies are the only ones known. They include the Brown and McGill of Louisville 2-cent black on cover; the City Despatch Post 3-cent black on white with "C. C.," issued by the United States City Despatch, and the Philadelphia 1-cent blue on buff, U. S. P. O. with eagle, and the U. S. P. O. black on gray.

Mr. Chapman's collection absorbed the Sussdorf and Hendrickson, his St. Louis stamps were from the Ayer collection, and he got practically all of the postmasters and carriers out of the Bowers sale.

PLANS FOR FLEET REVIEW.

President Will Be on Mayflower, Anchored Off Statue of Liberty.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chairman of the Citizens' Committee, appointed by Mayor Mitchel to arrange for the reception of the Atlantic Fleet, which arrives in New York next Saturday, announced yesterday that President Wilson had decided to review the fleet underway as well as at anchor. The review underway will take place on Tuesday morning, May 11, the President reviewing the fleet from the naval yacht Mayflower, off the Statute of Liberty. Each warship will be honored by the President with a personal salute.

Naval orders made public yesterday announced the appointment of Captain Guy H. Burrage now Commandant of Midshipmen at Annapolis, to command the battleship Nebraska. Captain George W. Logan, who was in command of the Nebraska, died at Norfolk last week, after a short illness contracted at sea while the two battleships were engaged in target practice off the Virginia Capes. Captain Logan was the youngest battleship commander in the Atalntic Fleet.

The Mayor's Committee was informed yesterday that the fleet commanders had decided that every day while the fleet is in the Hudson will be "visitors' day" on board all of the ships.

Mr. Vanderbilt announced yesterday the appointment of the following Chairman of various committees:

Dinner Committee, George T. Wilson; Hotel Committee, Archibald R. Watson; Officers' Entertainment Committee, Colonel Daniel Appleton; Sailors' Reception Committee, Finley J. Shepard; Religious Services Committee, Charles J. Sherrill; Finance Committee, Willard Straight; Landing and Communication Committee, W. Butler Duncan; Land Parade Committee, General George A. Wingate; Committee on Invitation, Ralph Pulitzer.

AUTO KILLINGS GROW.

Five More Deaths in New York in April Than in That Month Last Year.

According to the report of accidents due to vehicular traffic for the month of April of the National Highways Protective Society, issued yesterday, twenty children were killed in the streets of New York. Automobiles killed nine, wagons seven, and trolleys four. Six were killed jumping on and off trucks.

The total of persons killed in the month was thirty-eight. Of these, twenty-one were killed by automobiles, seven by wagons, and ten by trolleys, compared with sixteen by automobiles, fifteen by wagons, and fourteen by trolleys in April, 1914.

In the State of New York, in streets and highways outside of New York City, twenty were killed by automobiles, two by trolleys, and one by a wagon, compared with nine by automobiles and four by trolleys in April, 1914.

The New Jersey list shows that twelve were killed by automobiles and seven by trolleys. At railroad grade crossings in New Jersey four persons were killed, and in New York State five.

LOAN PICTURE STOLEN.

Opponent of Nude Art May Have Sought to Prevent Its Exhibition.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., May 1.—Following the removal from an exhibition in the new public library of a nude painting which, according to several local critics, was not good for the morals of children, and serious objection entered against another nude which is still on the walls, New Rochelle was startled today to learn that the police are looking for a person with similar sentiments in connection with the disappearance of Miss Helen Watson Phelps's portrait of a Spanish dancer. It is said that a woman, whose name is withheld, entered a protest against the picture, which is a portrait of a pupil of Otero dressed in the conventional costume of the type, on account of the extreme low bodice.

The exhibition, which was lent by the Association of Women Painters and Sculptors, was opened here some time ago under the patronage of the local woman's club to inaugurate the large exhibition gallery in the new library. Before the pictures had been up long protests resulted in the removal of one nude painted by a well-known New York woman, and serious objection was raised against a large picture of a nude girl beside a pool.

It is reported that one of those who protested against this latter picture was the critic of Miss Phelps's portrait, which was much smaller than the other picture and could easily have been carried away under a wrap. It hung near the entrance of the gallery, and no custodian was on duty to watch the paintings until after the theft of this picture.

Miss Phelps, who has offered a reward based on a $200 valuation of the picture, is at a loss to understand what anybody could find objectionable in it, as the dancer is dressed as fully as dancers usually are, and the police and library authorities are not sure whether it was taken by an art lover who couldn't afford to buy it, or a critical censor who wanted to get it out of the way.

HUSBAND TO CONTEST WILL.

F. J. Lewis Finds Wife in One Testament Left Him Only $500.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 1.—A contest is promised over the disposition of the estate of Mrs. Ellen J. Lewis, who died recently in Rockville Centre possessed of property valued at $24,500. Frederick J. Lewis, the husband of the testator, appeared in the Surrogate's Court today to ask that he be appointed administrator, according to the terms of a will in which he is named as the chief beneficiary, but shortly afterward Earl J. Bennett, a lawyer of Rockville Centre, filed for probate another will, in which the husband is not named as administrator, and gets only the income from the residuary estate, amounting, Mr. Bennett said, to $500.

The husband's will is dated July 25, 1914, and the lawyer's Oct. 20, 1914. According to Mr. Bennett, Mrs. Lewis reduced her husband's inheritance after she had begun and abandoned a suit for separation. Mr. Lewis announced that he would contest the alleged later will.

In the October will, Mrs. Lewis is credited with disposing of the bulk of her property as follows: To Daniel Y. Young, a cousin, of 160 Berkeley Place, Brooklyn, $10,500; to a son and daughter of his, $1,000 each; to Dr. William Emerson of New Rochelle, $2,000; to Mat Davis, a friend, of Rockville Centre, $1,000, all jewelry and wearing apparel; to the Dutch Reformed Church at Rhinebeck, N. Y., $2,000; to the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, in Rockville Centre, $1,000, and to the Methodist Episcopal Church of Sixth and Seventh Avenues, New York City, the trust fund allowed Mr. Lewis in case of his remarriage or death.

PRINCESS AUERSPERG WEDS J. J. MURPHY

Divorcee of Last Winter Marries Son of ex-New York Senator at Seabright.

COUNTY JUDGE OFFICIATES

Bride Is a Daughter of Late Edw. C. Hazard—Ex-Husband a Medical Officer of Red Cross in Austria.

Princess Florence Hazard Auersperg, who obtained a divorce in January, and John J. Murphy, one of the nine children of the late ex-Senator Edward Murphy, Jr., of Troy, were married at noon yesterday at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Alfred N. Beadleston, at Seabright, N. J., the ceremony being performed by County Judge Rulif V. Lawrence. The bride was unattended and wore a blue traveling gown. There were no attendants, and none except the immediate family were present. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. Murphy and his brid started on a motor tour, and on their return they will live in New York, where Mr. Murphy is in business.

Mrs. Murphy is a daughter of the late Edward C. Hazard, catsup manufacturer. She met Prince Auersperg when she was about 16, and a year later, in 1899, was married to him by the Rev. James A. Reynolds. The Prince was born in Prague in 1869, and came of a family of one of the pety sovereigns. He held a commission in one of the Austrian regiments, but spent his money and came here to start life over again. He studied medicine at the Long Island Hospital, and while a student met Miss Hazard. The Prince and Princess lived together until 1905.

Trouble followed the reading of the will of Mr. Hazard, who died in March, 1905. A considerable inheritance was left to the Princess. The Prince, the wife, said in her divorce action, considered that all of the inheritance should be in his name. Following their disagreement the Princess joined her mother, Mrs. Hazard, at Seabright.

The Prince then went to Texas. At the beginning of the war the Prince went to Austria, and is said to be one of the principal medical officers of the Red Cross in Austria.

In the divorce proceedings, heard before William S'Asper of Hoboken, the Princess testified that she had exerted every effort for a reconciliation, but unsuccessfully. His full name is Prince Francis Maria Joseph Auersperg, and he is the son of a former Premier of Austria. One of the Prince's sisters was brought up at the Austrian Court with Archduchess Valerie and was married to Count Ferdinand Kinsky, Grand Master of the Horse to Emperor Francis Joseph.

Columbia Seniors Elect Officers.

Columbia's senior class elected permanent officers yesterday. Walter Dwyer, Chairman of the Student Board, was chosen President, S. G. Stone and L. Roberts Vice Presidents, Frank G. Dunham Secretary, S. Bijur Treasurer, and Lester C. Danielson Class Historian. The Class Day officers chosen were J. Colletti, valedictorian; M. A. Bridges, Ivy Orator; C. Trenor, Historian; Frank G. Dunham, Prophet, and S. G. Stone, Presentation Orator. George Smith was chosen as recipient of the Alumni prize of $50 for the best all-around Columbia man of the senior class.

TOMMY ATKINS NOW HAPPY.

British Soldiers Send Postcard Thanks for Tobacco.

A business man of this city, whose brother is an officer in the English army, on receiving a letter from his brother some time ago, saying that the privates seemed generally content with their hard lot in Northern France except for the fact that it was difficult to get tobacco, started a little "relief" fund among his friends here to supply this commodity. A large number of his friends contributed a dollar apiece to his fund, and the contributions, together with the names and addresses of the friends, were sent to the officer brother.

The officer had a dollar's worth of cigarettes and smoking tobacco purchased in London for each private, and gave each recipient of a package a post card addressed to one of the New York contributors with the suggestion that a few lines of thanks be sent to the contributors. Several of the cards have already been received. One, from "Chris. Silverwood, 10th Royal Hussars," was received by a member of the New York Athletic Club a few days ago. One side of the card bore a pen and ink sketch of Tommy Atkins sitting on a soap box, and delightedly puffing at a cigarette. "Are we downhearted? No!" read the inscription beneath it. On the other side the soldier had written in pencil:

Dear Sir:

Thanks so much for your cigarettes and tobacco, which we had distributed to us today. It is awfully kind of you to think about us, and I can assure you we will do our best to earn the gift. I beg to remain,

Yours sincerely,
CHRIS. SILVERWOOD.

The cards were stamped, "On Active Service," and each bore the signature, in place of a stamp, of a Lieutenant. Some of those received were humorous, and one of the writers, after saying that he was grateful for the tobacco, added that the men were so well cared for that they had nothing to bother about at all except the enemy.

SCOUTS SEEK RUNAWAY BOY

Troop 8 of the Boy Scouts of America, which is affiliated with the Baptist Church of Jamaica, and the police are hunting twelve-year-old J. Harvey Stewart of 503 Clinton Avenue, Jamaica, son of John Harvey Stewart, who disappeared from his home on Friday afternoon, leaving a note to his mother saying he was going because he had been threatened with a poor mark in deportment in school. The boy was last seen boarding a surface car bound for Flushing, soon after he left home.

The boy told his mother in the note that she would not see him again, but that he might write to her. Mrs. Stewart is prostrated, and has scarcely slept or eaten since her son went away. All Friday night and last night she left a light burning in the hall in the hope he might return. The lad had a key to the house. Stewart is head of an ornamental iron works concern.

Young Stewart attended the Model School connected with the City Training School for Teachers, and was in Miss Rose West's class. Miss West said she reproved him on Friday for jostling other boys, and told him she might have to give him a low mark in deportment. She had no idea it would affect the boy so.

The lad wore his scout uniform and a black and gray mackinaw. He is light-complexioned and has blue eyes. He had a little money and carried a suitcase and a satchel packed with clothes, evidently meaning to go away for good.

SIEGEL DEPOSITORS HECKLE MRS. WILDE

Ex-Wife Testifies Last Money Merchant Gave Her Was $1,000 in 1912.

UPROAR OVER A SNAPSHOT

"I Was Regularly Done, Like Rest of Those in the Courtroom," Witness Declares.

Mrs. Madeline M. Wilde, who recently got a divorce from Henry Siegel, the bankrupt banker and department store man, was examined yesterday before Stanley W. Dexter, referee, in the Federal Building in the endeavor to obtain from her information which might enable the depositors in the Siegel Bank to discover what has become of their money. A large number of depositors crowded the courtroom, and some of the women in particular were active in showering questions on the witness.

William Henkel, Jr., counsel for the trustee in bankruptcy, was anxious to find out how much money Siegel had paid Mrs. Wilde since their separation. She stated that she was divorced last March, but she had separated from her husband four years before that, and had not seen him since Aug. 1, 1910. She was to receive $25,000 a year, but the last money paid her, she said, was $1,000 in December, 1912.

The witness stated that she owned an apartment in Paris, the furniture of which was insured for $20,000, and then Mr. Henkel fired a question at her:

"Did you ever spend $40,000 in one night in Paris?"

"No," was Mrs. Wilde's emphatic answer.

Mr. Henkel turned off to ask whether she had ever done anything to aid the depositors, who had lost everything in the smash of her husband's bank. Had any who were starving applied to her? he asked.

"No," replied Mrs. Wilde, "but I visited several when I heard they were sick. But I didn't let them know who was helping them."

As she was testifying a photographer took a snap-shot of Mrs. Wilde and she protested vigorously. Turning to Referee Dexter, she exclaimed:

"Your Honor, I ask your protection. He's taken a picture of me. He's got it in his pocket. I demand that he be made to give it up."

Mrs. Wilde sprang up and an uproar began. The depositors had little respect for her feelings and began to call out, "Why shouldn't she have her picture taken?" "Keep your camera, young man."

One woman began to weep with excitement, and another shouted out that she had her picture taken at Siegel's trial at Geneseo, and why should not Mrs. Wilde be taken, too.

It was several minutes before order could be restored, and Mr. Dexter made the photographer give up the photographs he had taken. There was talk of having him taken before the court for contempt, but, as the referee doubted his right to take up that issue, nothing was done.

When the proceedings were resumed, Mrs. Wilde denied that Siegel had paid her $45,000 or had transferred any property to her. She had given up her claim to Driftwood, the Siegel estate at Mamaroneck, N. Y., for $5,000, and she had received half of the bedroom, drawing-room, and dining-room furniture in the Siegel house in Eighty-second Street, which was sold to satisfy a mortgage of $145,000.

Mrs. Wilde was unable to estimate the value of the bronzes, tapestries, pictures, and bric-à-brac, and said she never had discussed her husband's business with him. She had transferred back to him the only stock he ever had given her—two shares of Simpson-Crawford stock and one share in the Boston Siegel-Cooper store—as well as two life insurance policies.

Several of the depositors tried to break in with pointed questions, and Nash Rockwood, Mrs. Wilde's counsel, found it impossible to check them. Mr. Dexter inquired what was the object of the heckling, and was informed that it was intended to connect Mrs. Wilde with participation in previous proceeds.

Mrs. Emmeline Baker, who lost $9,000 in the Siegel crash, was one of the persistent questioners. She asked:

"Didn't you tell me at the St. Regis Hotel that Henry Siegel sent you abroad because one of his employes had told you he was taking the depositors' money?"

Mrs. Wilde admitted talking to Mrs. Baker, but denied absolutely she ever had made such a statement to her.

Mrs. Blanche Osborne, who lost $1,700, and is now trying to support an invalid husband and an aged mother, implored:

"For God's sake give us a little help. You are living in luxury and we are in hovels."

Mrs. Osborne asked what jewelry Mrs. Wilde had worn at her daughter's wedding in St. Thomas's Church last year, but the witness said she could not remember.

"When did you take your money from the Siegel bank?" asked Irving Kuhn, another depositor.

"When I went to Europe," was the answer.

"Why did you give up your life insurance policies to Siegel?"

"I was regularly done, like the rest of the people in the court room."

When Mrs. Wilde finished her testimony she was conducted from the Federal Building, guarded against the importunities of the depositors by half a dozen deputy marshals.

and repeated the testimony he gave at Rae Tanzer's examination as far as telling of the visit of her and a man who called himself "O. Osborne" to the Hotel Kensington, on Oct. 18. He was still testifying and had not come to the identification of James W. Osborne when Judge Hough adjourned court until 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning. The session yesterday lasted only half a day.

After court had adjourned, Miss Tanzer was asked by a TIMES reporter to give the explanation of her statement to the United States District Attorney's office which she wanted to give on the witness stand. She said:

"James W. Osborne is a good actor. He can stand up straight or slouch over so that he doesn't seem the same man. He can hold his face smooth or he can wrinkle it all up. Also, he doesn't look the same when he wears glasses and his business clothes as when he takes his glasses off and wears smart clothes. Well, when I brought the suit against him I was sure he was Oliver, then when I saw him in Commissioner Houghton's office he was slouching, wearing glasses and clothes I hadn't ever seen, and his face was all wrinkled up.

"He didn't look like Oliver then and I began to doubt whether I had the right man. This doubt got stronger and besides I was frightened to death because the powerful United States Government seemed to be after me, and so I determined to give Mr. Osborne the benefit of the doubt. I thought if I did that the whole case would be dropped. But when they didn't drop the case and when I got over my fright, I wasn't sure whether Mr. Osborne was the right man or not, so I looked at him again at this trial and I am convinced now that he is Oliver."

Safford will continue his testimony when court opens tomorrow morning.

CRUSADE ON FAKE DENTISTS

Westchester County to Prosecute for Illegal Registrations.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 1.—District Attorney Frederick E. Weeks sent a letter today to the University Regents, asking information as to a list of 400 dentists, believed to be illegally registered.

"I expect to show up hundreds of these fake practitioners," said Assistant District Attorney Fallon, "and there may be wholesale arrests. I have learned that there has been a system of graft whereby fake license certificates have been issued.

"Teeth have been extracted in such a manner that several persons nearly died of lockjaw, cocaine has been injected until several persons have become drug users, while imitation gold has been used in bridge work and in crowns."

It is said that the Westchester Grand Jury next Monday will investigate all dental registrations of the past five years. Already several dentists have skipped, and detectives are hunting Sylvester Bresnan, who is wanted under a perjury warrant, because of alleged illegal registration in Westchester County. He is supposed to have run a shop near 120th Street and Seventh Avenue, New York, but the Board of Regents have notified District Attorney Weeks that Bresnan was not legally registered.

It appears that a few days after the notice was received from Albany, a man appeared at the County Clerk's office and asked to inspect the dental register. Three days later it was found that pages 109 and 110, which contained the affidavits of Bresnan and one Bromberg, had been cut out.

It is said there were "dentist brokers" in New York, who sold fake licenses.

32,300 IN CHICAGO STRIKE.

Labor Troubles There Cause 125,000 Men to be Idle.

CHICAGO, May 1.—Chicago is confronted by the most serious labor situation in the building industry in fifteen years. By the addition of 1,200 bridge and structural iron workers, the list of union workmen on strike or locked out was swelled to 32,200 today, as follows: Carpenters (construction), 13,000; carpenters (mill men), 5,000; sheet metal workers, 1,900; lathers, 800; painters, 10,400; structural iron workers, 1,200.

The strike of the iron workers forced idleness on several thousand others in allied trades, bringing the number of idle because of strikes and lockouts up to 125,000. The strike of the carpenters is said to be the keystone of the whole situation. If peace negotiations now on with them are successful, it is generally believed that others will fall in line.

The customary May 1 agreements with many other unions have been signed, and outside the building trades the prospect is said to be for industrial peace.

Van Houten Signed Only a Protest.

The printed statement that the Rev. Charles N. Van Houten, assistant minister of the North Presbyterian Church, had signed a paper demanding that the Presbyterian General Assembly, which is soon to meet in Rochester, name a committee to investigate the New York Presbytery was a mistake. What Mr. Van Houten signed was a protest that charges made against the Presbytery were unjust.

Commits Suicide After Family Row.

Wolf Gurgen, 53 years old, a grocer, living at 751 St. Ouen Place, Wakefield, died in Fordham Hospital early last night, several hours after he had taken a large quantity of bichloride of mercury in powdered form. Gurgen, according to the police, took his life following a quarrel with his wife. They had several disputes recently.

DANVILLE SALOONS CLOSED.

City Council Votes Against Renewal of Licenses—Lincoln Dry, Too.

DANVILLE, Ill., May 1.—Danville was voted dry by the City Council in special meeting today for the first time in the history of the city. The council was called for a special meeting to act on the renewal of licenses of seventy-three saloons which expired at midnight last night.

The action of the Council means that Danville will be without saloons for at least a year, until another expression of the people is had. At the recent township election the wets were victorious by more than 1,500 majority.

Shortly after the Council adjourned most of the saloon men began the sale of soft drinks. During the afternoon busses were run to the village of Lyons, five miles distant, where there are several saloons. Passengers were carried free.

LINCOLN, Neb., May 1. — The twenty-five saloons here were closed today with the expiration of the municipal year. Remonstrances were filed against the granting of licenses until May 10. Rather than take the cases into the courts, saloonmen decided to remain closed until the election of a new excise board May 10.

Sea Beach Line to Coney Open.

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit put in full operation yesterday its Sea Beach line from Sixty-first Street, Brooklyn, to Coney Island. This has been entirely reconstructed in connection with the new Subway system. Until the Fourth Avenue line is open, probably next month, single cars on a short headway will be run instead of trains.

LAUNCH TWO NEW CUTTERS.

McAdoo's Daughter Sponsor for One —Both Vessels Cost $475,000.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., May 1.—The new coast guard cutters Tallapoosa and Ossipee were successfully launched here today. The Ossipee bumped a pier going down the ways but did no damage.

The launching took place at the yards of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company. Miss Sally Fleming McAdoo, the 11-year-old daughter of the Secretary of the Treasury, was sponsor for the Ossipee, and Miss Mabel Hartwell, daughter of H. T. Hartwell of Mobile, Ala., for the Tallapoosa.

The two cutters were authorized by Congress in June, 1914, the Ossipee at a cost of $225,000 and the Tallapoosa at $250,000. The Tallapoosa will replace the old cutter Winona, with headquarters at Mobile, and the Ossipee replaces the cutter Woodbury, at Portland, Me.

The new vessels are practically duplicates, each being 165½ feet long over all, 32-foot beam, 20½-foot deep and of about 900 tons normal displacement. Each will be armed with a battery of four standard navy 6-pounder rapid-fire rifles and have a steaming radius of about 5,000 miles.

Rear Fenders for 5th Ave. Buses.

The coaches of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company are to appear shortly equipped with fenders. They are to be attached to the sides of the vehicles in front of the rear wheels, so as to prevent pedestrians falling under those wheels. The Public Service Commission ordered the installation. It has been found that the motorman can guard against accidents occurring in front of him, but that without his knowledge persons have run into the side of the buses and been caught under the rear wheels.

VOTES FOR COMMISSION.

New City Plan Adopted at Special Election in Newburgh.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 1.—Newburgh, in a special election today, adopted a new city charter providing for five commissioners and a city manager, to be appointed by the commissioners. The charter is one provided for cities of this class by Legislative enactment.

The new charter carried by a vote of 1,432 for to 1,087 against the plan. The proposition was supported by the Citizens' League. About half the normal vote of the city was cast.

TOMORROW begins New York's most interesting

ANNUAL SALE of HARDMAN PIANOS and AUTOTONES

AS A RESULT of the CLOSING of the METROPOLITAN OPERA SEASON of 1914-15

This is the only time in the whole year when Hardman Pianos and Autotones can be bought under price

A splendid assemblage of Pianos and Player-Pianos is included in this offering, because the Hardman is the official Piano of the Metropolitan Opera House, and a large number of instruments are supplied by us each year for the personal use of the artists in their apartments and rehearsal rooms, and also for chorus work by the Opera Company.

This entire collection of Pianos and Player-Pianos is thus endorsed for distinguished service and

MANY HAVE BEEN AUTOGRAPHED BY THE ARTISTS WHO USED THEM

Naturally the number of autographed instruments is very limited—the one endorsed by your favorite singer may be claimed early tomorrow—so promptness is advisable.

Reductions of from $75 to $250

All of the instruments are new, excepting for the short distinguished service they have given to these artists. They are even better than new, because they have been kept so thoroughly regulated and perfectly tuned for their use with the voices of these great singers.

This Sale Also Affords
UNPRECEDENTED REDUCTIONS IN NEW HARDMAN PIANOS IN PERIOD DESIGNS

In addition to the Hardman Pianos and Autotones in standard models from the Metropolitan Opera House and its artists, this Annual Offering includes a splendid group of beautiful new Hardman Pianos in Period Designs, with superb casings, in the most exquisite patterns and finish—offered at this time to give additional distinction to this Grand Opera Sale and affording an unprecedented opportunity for connoisseurs and furnishers of artistic homes, to purchase New Hardman Pianos in Period Designs at unprecedented reductions, ranging from $200 to $350.

Every instrument fully guaranteed.

Pianos purchased will be held and delivered next Fall, if so desired.

VERY EASY TERMS OF PAYMENT WILL BE ARRANGED

Come EARLY tomorrow for choicest selection

Our New York and Brooklyn Warerooms will be open evenings during this sale.

ITALY INAUGURATES NEW ARMY OFFICE

Creates Under Chief of General Staff to Direct Work of Mobilization.

LIEUT. GEN. PORRO NAMED

His New Duties Defined in Recent Ministerial Decree Which Censor Did Not Allow to Pass.

One of the things which the Italian censor did not allow to pass on account of the National Defense Law of March 22 was the news of the creation of a new military office, thata of Under Chief of the General Staff. All that was allowed to come out on the subject was contained in a brief dispatch to Paris on April 24, which said that General Caderna's "principal assistant is Lieut. Gen. Porro." As General Cadorna, the Chief of the General Staff—an office corresponding to the one Joffre occupied in France before he was made Generalissimo—has always had a civilian secretary as his "principal assistant" the appearance of the name of General Porro excited some curiosity among Italians here.

As a matter of fact a new office has been created and Lieut. Gen. Count Caslo Porro has been appointed to fill it. A ministerial decree of April 5 has created a "Sottocapo di Stato Maggiore dell' Esercito," and had defined the duties of that office as follows:

"The Under Chief of the General Staff of the army shall aid the Chief of the General Staff, and divide with him his duties, and particularly direct the carrying out of the plans for mobilization or whatever other duty may be assigned to him by the Chief of the General Staff. For such work he must be completely informed as to the intentions of the Chief, and with him and under him be ready on all matters concerning the preparations for war, (relativi alla preparazione della guerra.) The Under Chief will substitute himself for the Chief in the case of the latter's absence and represent him."

Lieut. Gen. Conte Carlo Porro is not only an old friend of the chief, but an officer who is considered the greatest military expert in the Peninsula. Several times the portfolio of war has been offered him, but his plans for the reorganization of the army have always been deemed too expensive.

A year ago last March Premier Salandra offered him the portfolio, having just given the portfolio of the Treasury to Deputy Giulio Rubini di Dongo. The General was then in command of a division at Milan. The three held several conferences, but Rubini did not see how the country could pay the $160,000,000 required by General Porro's program, so the latter went back to Milan and was then transferred to Bologna.

Five months later the war caused the Government to change its views. Signor Grandi, the new Minister of War, resigned, the Chief of the General Staff, General Pollis, died, and the portfolio of the Treasury was given up by Rubini. This brought to the front men who were in full sympathy with General Porro's program. General Zupelli as Minister of War, General Cadoria as Chief of the General Staff, and Signor Carcano as Minister of Finance. These three appropriated General Porro's program in toto and have now created a position for him so that he may see thast the program will be practically carried out.

Carlo Porro of the Counts of Santa Maria della Bicocca carries as a watch charm the Austrian bullet which killed his father at Salferino in 1859. He was then 5 years old. He was privately educated and entered the army as a Second Lieutenant in 1875. After passing through the intermediate grades he was promoted to be Lieutenant General in 1911. He was Under Secretary of War in the second Fortis Cabinet, 1905-1906, when the chief of his department was General Count Luigi Mainoni d'Intignano.

General Porro has taught military geography at the School of War and for several years has been the head of that institution. He has also written a book on military geography which has been translated into German and adopted by the German authorities as a text book in the Government schools.

WILSON PLANTS A TREE.

President's Baby Grandson Looks On While He Wields the Shovel.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., May 1.—President Wilson arrived here this afternoon to attend the christening of his infant grandson, Francis Sayre, and an additional ceremony was arranged for him in assisting to plant a small walnut tree which had been presented to Francis Sayre by President Garfield of Williams College.

President Wilson was accompanied by Miss Margaret Wilson, his daughter; Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, his cousin, and Dr. Cary T. Grayson, the White House physician. The party immediately went to the Sayre home, and an hour and a half afterward Master Sayre was carried from the house to take active part in the planting of the tree. While the family gathered around President Wilson threw a shovel full of earth on the roots of the tree. Then President Garfield, Mrs. Garfield, Mrs. Robert H. Sayre, and the Rev. J. Franklin Carter each took a turn at the shoveling.

The christening will take place tomorrow afternoon. President Wilson and John Nevin Sayre, brother of Francis B. Sayre, will be the sponsors of the infant, and Miss Agnes Winter of Philadelphia will be the godmother.

President Wilson will return to Washington soon after the ceremony.

WOMAN ASKS POLICE CARE.

Averilla Dickie May Be Suffering from Mental Strain.

Patrolman Patrick Sullivan, of Traffic Squad C, on duty at Thirty-fourth Street and Park Avenue, was approached yesterday afternoon by a refined-looking woman, about 54 years old, who requested that the police take care of her. The woman would give no reasons for her strange request.

Patrolman Sullivan escorted her to the West Thirtieth Street Station, where she told Lieutenant Lawson that her name was Averilla Dickie, and that she lived at the Park Avenue Hotel. Dr. Murray, of the New York Hospital, was called, and after examination had the woman transferred to Bellevue Hospital for observation.

Inquiries at the Park Avenue Hotel disclosed the fact that no woman of that name was employed or registered there. The police are trying to find out the woman's correct address, as it was the opinion of Dr. Murray that she is the victim of some mental strain.

MAYOR'S BAN ON RUBBISH.

Warns Against Throwing Refuse About in the Parks.

In furtherance of the vigorous effort which he is making to improve the appearance of the parks, Mayor Mitchel issued yesterday this proclamation:

The city ordinance forbids all persons to throw, or in any manner deposit on the walks, lawns, benches, or on the earth in any of the public parks any newspaper, waste paper of any kind, peanut shells, or other rubbish.

The park and police authorities will vigorously enforce this ordinance.

JOHN PURROY MITCHEL, Mayor.

The Mayor said that the proclamation was issued as part of an effort to keep all the city parks clean and in good order, so that all persons might enjoy them to the fullest possible extent.

WAR NEARLY STRIPS U. S. OF GOOD HORSES

J. Fitzgerald Says Country May Soon Face Serious Situation.

CANADA STOPS EXPORT

Racing Official Points to Fact That Dominion Government Is Encouraging Breeding.

C. J. Fitzgerald, President of the Cook-Fitzgerald Company, manufacturers of horses of London, Ontario, but more widely known on this side of the border as the President for many years of the Brighton Beach Racing Association, and before that Starter of the Jockey Club here and in New Orleans, gave an interesting outline of general business conditions in Canada yesterday, during a short stop at the Belmont on his way back home from Baltimore.

While in Maryland Fitzgerald served as Steward at a meeting of the Hartford Agricultural and Breeders' Association, which conducted fourteen days of horse racing, under the auspices of the Jockey Club of New York. He says that the United States has been stripped of good horses by the European war, and that the situation in Canada is a little better only because the sale of horses was stopped.

"The merchants have full stocks on their shelves, which they have been unable to dispose of because of general conditions, and the manufacturers and the supply houses have been compelled to carry large bills over the season. They, however, are confident of the future and have every faith in the country. There was a lull in railway building for a time, owing to a scarcity of funds, at the beginning of the war; but with the opening of Spring work was begun, or was about to begin, on the lines of the three transcontinental roads, which are building branches as fast as they are needed. Crops are good, however, and prices of grain are high.

"Ontario, the banner province of the Dominion, has suffered less, probably, than any other portion of Canada. Had it not been for the war, which has taken away a great many young men, conditions would be the same as during the last ten years. The Maritime Provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, which are extremely conservative, are in a much better condition than one would suppose, taking the general business situation into consideration.

"The people of the Dominion have given up their men and their money lavishly for the war in Europe. I could name half a dozen millionaires who have gone to the front accompanied by their sons. With all those to whom I have talked the main consideration has been, 'Our country first.' London has been one of the districts for mobilization. The day before I left home I saw 3,000 of the flower of Canadian manhood, between 20 and 35 years of age, on parade. All were going away the next day, and already they are preparing for a third contingent.

"Opinion seems to be general in Canada that the war will last a long time; but, having begun the work, the Canadians are prepared to see it to a finish. Our own town has come through the Winter in very good shape, having raised a fund of $137,000 to care for the wives and dependents of those who have gone to the front, as well as the families of those who may be in need as a result of the war.

"The country is almost denuded of good horses, which have been taken by the Dominion Government. In some sections the Imperial Government made purchases early in the game, but, realizing that Canada needed all its available supply for remounts and for artillery, it gave up buying there, and no outside purchasing has been permitted for some time. The Government, which has for some years encouraged the breeding of horses through the giving of bounties, as I outlined in a letter to THE TIMES some weeks ago, will, it is understood, make further concessions, with a view to increasing to the utmost capacity the breeding of good horses. It is realized that a tremendous mistake was made in permitting mares of a type necessary to produce cavalry and artillery horses to leave the country. It is an unfortunate fact that fully 50 per cent. of the many thousands of head shipped to Continental battlefields were mares, many of which were with foal, and these will be utterly useless in case they survive.

"We in Canada believe in the thoroughbred stallion as the proper cross for our trotting, saddle, and coaching-bred mares, and while we have always had a number of these horses of good blood in the country, some having been imported from the United States and others from England, and still others from France, the need for an increased supply was never so insistent as at present. There are probably 150 thoroughbreds standing for service in various parts of Canada. If the proper type of stallion can be obtained, I venture to say this number can be doubled in the next two years.

"It is no easy matter, however, to find big, upstanding thoroughbreds of sixteen hands or over, with depth of heart, size of bone, perfection of disposition, and the necessary soundness to beget unblemished colts, as racing has been neglected to such a degree in the United States that there has been no incentive to breeding. I believe, however, that there is a sentiment for the return of the sport. Judging by what I have seen and heard in the United States during the past month, there is a realization that racing is a necessity in order to perpetuate all that is best in our general horse production. We in Canada are going to run our meetings as usual this season, with stakes and purses as heretofore.

"At the present time the United States is worse off than Canada in the matter of horses, because there is no let or hindrance here to their purchase. Great Britain, France, and Italy have commissioners everywhere over here, and all report an alarming scarcity of proper horses left in the country. There are a dozen agents in this hotel, and from what they say, and others, it is to be gathered that this country is up against a serious situation.

"There is a story of an old horse trainer, who when asked what was the first requisite of a horse would say, 'Speed.' And the next? 'More speed.' What's necessary in this country in order to save the horse is racing. That's the primary requisite, and the second is more racing."

MAY DAY FETES POSTPONED.

Applications for Central Park Parties Made for Next Saturday.

It was May Day yesterday, and the fresh green grass and budding trees of Central Park and other parks of the city made them inviting in the afternoon, when the weather was moderate. But Sunday School parties and picknickers generally must have remembered past experiences in making their May Day outing plans this year, for Queens o'the May were absent. At the office of the Park Board, in the Municipal Building, it was said that most of the applications for lawn permits had been made for next Saturday.

A number of the greens and lawns of Central Park have been applied for for next Saturday by large church and other organizations, it is said, and next Saturday the park will be peopled by gay throngs of children in costume, May poles, and all of the things that go with May Day parties.

The good weather, however, did attract a large number of persons to the parks yesterday, and the Park Board's order for a stricter enforcement of the law regarding rubbish went into effect. Policemen were ordered to begin a season of unusual effort to prevent paper boxes and other refuse from being thrown on the walks and [illegible]

An Amazing Sale of Women's Dresses at $18.75

$18.75 An adaptation of Premet's famous model, "A Petits Pas." Sleeves of Georgette crepe to match; collar and vestee of embroidered organdie. Navy and black.

$18.75 A new model combining the ideas of Paquin and Martial et Armand. Louis XIII. collar and cuffs of white linen; cravat of black satin. Navy and black.

$18.75 This model is a composite of the best features of several Paris models. It's one of the newest and best notes. Organdie collar and cuffs. Navy and black.

GIMBEL Initiative

is responsible for this sale, which will undoubtedly astonish New York. Several weeks ago we noticed that there was a gradual trend toward Frocks of Navy and Black Taffeta. Then we searched the silk market and found a tremendous yardage of which we bought at an almost unheard-of price because we took the entire quantity. We had the Paris models and the co-operation of one of the best dressmakers in New York. And tomorrow 200 of these Dresses will be here in all sizes from 34 to 42. Third Floor

Very Fine Chiffon Taffetas

A Gigantic Purchase of Petticoats for the May Sale---at 50c and $1

6,360 of the best made Petticoats in America! They come to us from a manufacturer who stands second to none in the making of fine lingerie. Many of these Petticoats have sold regularly at several times tomorrow's prices.

1,500 Petticoats at $1 instead of $2 and more

4,860 Petticoats at 50c instead of $1 and more

The trimmings on many of the Petticoats at 50c are joined with veining. Remarkable, is it not?

There are Petticoats of fine Pique, finished with scalloping or embroidery edging, at 50c. Many styles trimmed with fine laces—with lace-finished underlays, too.

At $1 there are Petticoats trimmed with embroideries that would alone cost much more than that amount.

And there are lace-trimmed styles pretty enough to wear under the finest French frock. Main and Second Floors—Also Subway Balcony

NEMO Corsets to be Specialized During This Week

As GIMBELS is the New York headquarters for the famous Nemo Corsets, we have turned every effort toward making Nemo Week a benefit to all women.

Nemo Corsets have never been so much in demand as they are at the present moment.

Why? Because the well-corseted figure is again in vogue.

Nemo Corsets not only give the new silhouette—with the nip at the waistline—but they give comfort to the figure which has been changed by the loose and topless corsets of the last few seasons. One instance of this is the enlarged diaphragms.

The New NEMO Corset with the "Wonderlift" Device at $5

is the first corset that is capable of assisting nature, for it is designed to imitate the muscles of the abdomen, and therefore gives a perfectly natural support to the body. Besides, the straps of Lastikops Webbing in the "Wonderlift" device give an automatic massage which reduces the abdomen.

During this week we shall specialize the

Bawo (pronounced "bay-o") & Dotter in the 70's bought the Elite factory at Limoges, France. In the 80's they opened two factories, one in Austria —at Fischern near Carlsbad, and the other at Steinschenau in Bohemia.

Later they became American distributors for Crown Derby and Copeland or Spode English wares. The business when incorporating as Bawo & Dotter, L't'd. did so under Canadian Charter—and the exigencies of the European War drove the grand old concern into Receivers' hands.

No payments or intercourse were permitted with their German potteries and interests. And their prohibition acted as the death knell of this Inter-Continental business.

The stocks were sold by order of the United States District Court and the China and Glass holdings—$120,000.00 at landing cost—came to Gimbel Brothers.

$1.50 Pure Dye Chiffon Taffeta, 36-in., $1.15 Yd.

Here is another fine bit of news from the Silk Store. Taffeta Silk—the season's highest favorite—in a peculiarly soft, pleasant weave, utterly unlike the crackly silks that are stiff with adulteration, and therefore split and crack. Full yard wide, in twenty-five different favorite shades, including plenty of white, pink and navy blue. PURE DYE—which means long service.

This is such a "good thing" that once more manufacturers of women's dresses are teasing us to let them take the whole lot at a good profit to us. This is getting to be a habit, when a GIMBEL silk offering is made.

The New York Times
CURRENT HISTORY
A Monthly Magazine
THE EUROPEAN WAR

This magazine originated in the extaordinary demand for an intelligent, readable, explanatory record of the events which have occurred since August 1, 1914. Not one-sided or prejudiced, it prints the story as told by the chief antagonists, the eyewitnesses, and the literary spokesmen of the nations in this tragic drama of history.

When the powers of historians of the future have been taxed to write a full and well-proportioned account of this war, it will still lack the vividness and sheer thrill of these first-hand accounts. The impassioned speeches of the German Emperor; the terse, dramatic descriptions from the fronts by staff correspondents of the world's newspapers; the glimpses of fighting in the letters of soldiers, and the words of fate spoken from the European Chancelleries suffice to give the reader a reasoned notion of the causes and effects, the interplay of moral and spiritual antagonisms that have hurled vast armies into conflict.

While the European war furnished the occasion for starting this magazine, it had been planned long in advance to be a permanent monthly review recording the progress of the world as told by great authorities and gifted spokesmen. As coming events cast their shadows before, Current History will interpret the past and the present with an outlook upon the future. Great programs of action and forecasts of future events, when made by able men, will be included.

GOVERNOR PLANTS A NEW TREATY OAK

Bartow Mansion in Pelham Bay Park Turned Over to the International Garden Club.

MANY NOTABLES TAKE PART

Private Charles Vail of Battery D Is Crushed by Horse Frightened by a Salute.

When the first gun of a nineteen-gun salute for Gov. Whitman was fired at the International Garden Club at the Bartow Mansion, Pelham Bay Park, yesterday afternoon, a troop horse reared and fell back, crushing Charles Vail, a private in Battery D. The guardsman, with a fractured skull and probably mortal injuries, was rushed to the Fordham Hospital. Vail was standing at the head of a horse attached to a caisson wagon. As the first gun boomed out, the animal reared straight up, and, descending, struck him on the head with its hoofs and trampled on his body as he lay helpless on the ground.

Gov. Whitman came down from Albany to be present at the opening and to take part in the replacing of the Treaty Oak in the grounds of the clubhouse, and the officers of the International Garden Club sent out many invitations to view the ceremony, meet the Governor, and have tea in the historic Bartow mansion. The city turned over the house to the club with seventeen acres of wooded ground surrounding it, without rental. In return the club has put the house, which was sadly in need of it, in good repair, furnished it, and laid out the grounds, which are to be transformed by gardens. Mrs. Charles Frederick Hoffman is President of the club, Dr. George Norton Miller, Vice President; Mrs. H. de Berkeley Parsons, Secretary, and William A. Jay is the Treasurer.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Honorary President of the club, made the speech of the day, and greeted the Governor, who arrived at 4 o'clock, accompanied by two aids ablaze with gold. After the ceremonies attending the planting of the oak, the Governor visited the clubhouse and had tea. He left a little before 5 o'clock.

In the evening the Governor attended a dinner, given for him and Mrs. Whitman by Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hoffman, at their residence, 620 Fifth Avenue. The rest of the day, however, he spent on the thirty-day bills, and received no callers except Bainbridge Colby, an old college friend. On May 25 the Governor will start for California, and his Military Secretary, Major J. Stanley Moore, is now working out his itinerary.

A walk marked by many little red flags showed the way from the clubhouse to the roped-in inclosure, in which the speeches and the planting took place, and ropes marked with red flags indicated the parking space for the many motors. Tea and other refreshments were served in the Colonial dining room and on the veranda and terrace outside.

The oak planted yesterday took the place of the famous treaty oak recently destroyed by lightning, which was planted in 1648, when the Pell family obtained from the Indians the property on which Bartow Manor stands for $17.

Dr. Butler outlined the history of the tree, and said the city had now turned the ground over to the International Garden Club to be made into a breathing spot for the people. The club, whose headquarters will be in the Manor house, has already spent $25,000 in improvements.

The Governor used a silver trowel in planting the tree, and said that the new treaty between the city and the public was more important than the original one. The exercises also marked the turning over of the property to the club's use.

Bartow Mansion is a substantial and roomy stone house, and the front lawn is one of several acres. In this and the upper terrace many pale-green tables, with lattice chairs to match, are placed. At the right of the house is a large conservatory, done entirely in white and pale, dull green. As yet few flowers are seen, but some rare orchids were on view yesterday, and outside the trees showed some old-time gardens in pansies and primroses.

The walls throughout are done in palest dull blue and the woodwork in dull finished white. Each room is in a different color. One upstairs room is done in the most vivid colors in old-time chintz, with flowers of many kinds. Another is done in black and white stripes, with an occasional flower, and pink roses abound in another. A reception room on the first floor is done in brownish orange, with old-time black wooden plaques, and another room is in deep blue.

Mrs. Hofman, the President; Mrs. Parsons, the Secretary, and others received, and the official receiving committee included the President of the Board of Aldermen, Commissioners of Parks for the Bronx and Manhattan and Richmond, the President of the Botanical Garden, the President of the New York Horticultural Society, the President of the Florists's Club of New York. On the committee also were Mrs. C. B. Alexander, Mrs. A. B. Boardman, Mrs. Amory S. Carhart, Mrs. Alfred Ely, Miss Sarah Cooper Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver J. Jennings, Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Pendleton, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Parsons, Mrs. Moses Taylor Pyne, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Charles H. Senff, Miss Amy Townsend, Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Mrs. John Hobart Warren, Mrs. J. J. Wysong, Mrs. Newbold LeRoy Edgar, Mrs. J. Archibald Murray, Mr. and Mrs. John Callender Livingston and William Adams Delano.

Among others who were present to receive or as guests were Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Bishop David H. Greer, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Low, Mrs. Herbert C. Pell, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Taft, Mrs. Whitney Warren, Mr. and Mrs. James B. Clews, Mr. and Mrs. F. Ashton de Peyster, Mrs. Lewis Cruger Hassell, Mrs. George B. de Forest, Mrs. Burke Roche, Mrs. Lauterbach, Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler, the Misses Catherine and Margaret Leverich, Mrs. Gouverneur Kortwright, Mrs. E. Reeve Merritt, Lady Herbert, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Pell, Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne, George I. Rives, John D. Crimmins, Frederick C. Bourne, Miss Eleanor Hewitt, Mrs. James O. Green, A. M. Bagby, and Mrs. Henry S. Redmond.

MRS. M. S. MOORE MARRIES.

Wealthy Widow of Titanic Victim Weds A. C. P. Wichfeld, a Dane.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Mrs. Maybelle Swift Moore, Washington's wealthiest widow, whose husband, Clarence Moore, lost his life in the Titanic disaster, and the daughter of the late Edwin C. Swift of Chicago, was married here this afternoon to Axel Christian Prebén Wichfeld of New York City. The Rev. Dr. Roland Cotton Smith, rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, performed the ceremony, which took place at the bride's home in Massachusetts Avenue. Those who witnessed the ceremony were Miss Frances Moore, the bride's stepdaughter; Constantine Brun, the Danish Minister, with whom Mr. Wichfeld has been a house guest, and Woodbury Blair of Washington, an intimate friend of the Moore family.

Mr. Wichfeld is a Dane, who is said to be in business in New York. He was credited with being a nephew of the Danish Minister, but this was declared to be a nerror. The marriage license which was obtained by Mr. Blair, gave the age of the bridegroom as 29 and that of the bride as 26.

The news of the marriage came as a great surprise to society geenrally, as there had been no engagement. Mr. Wichfeld has been a frequent guest at the Moore home in the last Winter, and was with Mrs. Moore and her family during their travels abroad last Summer.

After a week in New York Mr. and Mrs. Wichfield will go to California. Later they will go to Swiftmoore, the estate of the bride, at Pride's Crossing, Mass., to pass the Summer.

As Miss Maybelle Swift, Mrs. Wichfield was prominent in the American colony of Paris before her marriage to Mr. Moore, when she was reported to be engaged to a Serbian Prince. She visited Washington immediately after this report was circulated, and met and married Mr. Moore, who had lived in West Virginia, but made his home here.

Mr. Moore took passage on the Titanic, after a visit to England, to purchase a hunting pack for the Chevy Chase Club, of which he was M. F. H. Besides her young step-daughter, who has inherited a comfortable fortune from her mother, the daughter of the late Frank McLaughlin of Philadelphia, Mrs. Moore's family included her own four young sons.

WILL BE WED BY CARDINAL.

Marriage of Miss Dorothy Conron and James Butler, Jr., on June 2.

The marriage of Miss Dorothy Conron, a daughter of Mrs. Joseph Conron of 263 West Ninetieth Street, to James Butler, Jr., will take place on June 2, at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Miss Conron will have Miss Gladys O'Donohue for maid of honor, and for bridesmaids, the Misses Isabel Amy, Genevieve Butler, Theresa Farrell, Estelle Mulqueen, Catherine Agnew, and Marguerite Radley. Pierce Butler will be his brother's best man. The ushers will be Cecil Arthur, Justin O'Brien, Daniel L. Meehan, Jr., William Butler, and Dr. D. Philip MacGuire of this city, and Robertson Griswold of Baltimore.

The ceremony will be performed by Cardinal Farley, and will be followed by a reception at the St. Regis.

The engagement was announced on Jan. 22 last.

TAKE WOMAN AS GEM THIEF.

Police Say Servant Confessed Stealing Mrs. Rosenfeldt's Jewels.

On a charge of grand larceny in having, as alleged, stolen diamond jewels valued at $1,350, Yetta Leiber, a young and attractive woman, for eighteen months a servant in the family of Mrs. Sara Rosenfeldt, 187 Pulaski Street, Brooklyn, was locked up last evening in the Hamburg Avenue Police Station, and will be arraigned today in the Gates Avenue Police Court. The woman, who is 25 years old, was arrested by Detectives Patten, Woddle, and O'Connor, of the Seventh Detective Branch. The police say she confessed how she had planned the robbery.

The jewelry, which belonged to a sister of Mrs. Rosenfeldt, comprised three diamond rings, a brooch, lavalliere, and breastpin, and had been given to Mrs. Rosenfeldt for safekeeping while the sister was in the country recuperating from a long illness. During the absence of the Rosenfeldt family Friday night the servant girl is alleged to have raised a rear window, to give the impression that a thief had gotten in that way, and put footprints on the window sill, besides turning the room topsy-turvy. The police say she took the jewelry to a dark spot at Tompkins Avenue and Pulaski Street, where excavation work for a trunk sewer had been going on for a long time, and hid it under a pile of paving blocks.

Her movements were watched by the police, after being notified of the theft, and when she left the house yesterday afternoon, feigning illness, the detectives followed her. They saw her go to the excavation, where she was observed taking a package from beneath a pile of paving stones. The detectives followed her, and when they seized her she became hysterical. The woman was under grilling for only a short time when she confessed the robbery, according to the police.

CAR 'ADS' AND GUM VANISH FROM B. R. T.

Brooklyn Awakens to Find Station Slot Machines, News Stands, and Posters Gone.

ROW OVER BIG CONTRACT

Brooklyn yesterday morning became one great interrogation point.

The average citizen awoke and with the usual helter-skelter rush and wended his more or less speedy way to the nearest means of transportation to New York.

And what a surprise. George busted up to get his favorite reading matter. Nothing doing. The newstand that should have been open hours before was still shut up. The papers, stacked in bundles, lay about the station platforms.

Charlotte quickened her pace as the train sped into the station to get her particular brand of gum, only to find the vending machine slots stoppered and the exits pasted over with heavy paper.

The signs on the elevated platforms were covered with white paper. No longer was the eye met with suggestions as to where to eat or what to eat or where to get rid of your money. Brooklynites missed all these things and wondered why.

The reason was this: With the expiration of the term of life of a "scrap of paper" war broke out suddenly between the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company and the Inter-City Car Adversiting Company. As an immediate result all advertising signs disappeared from the cars and elevated railroad stations in the borough and traveling Brooklynites were in the dark as to whose pills pale people should take or whose cold cream would bring grandma back to blushing sixteen.

President Williams of the Brooklyn system, explaining the situation, said yesterday:

"Our contracts with the advertising company were entered into eight years ago. Judging rfom what we can learn about the value of these privileges, and especially the rentals that are being paid by the same advertising interests and by other concerns in Greater New York, we are receiving a ridiculously small compensation and with the prospect of the very much larger business which will come with the prospect of the very much larger business which will come with the completion of the new rapid transit lines the present compensation is still more absurdly lo

"Inasmuch as in some of the privileges, those of the New York Consolidated Railroad Company, the city is jointly interested with us in getting as large a revenue as possible, we submitted to the Public Service Commission some time ago a form of contract on which we proposed to ask for bids.

"The Inter-City Car Advertising Company warned the commission that we had no right to let a contract to anybody else because the company had an option of renewal. This attitude of the advertising company prevented our receiving any bids for the privileges, except one small bid for vending machines. The advertising company had, therefore, put us in a position where our negotiations were limited to it, and we have sought for two months to get from it an explicit offer of compensation for the next five years.

"Any figures which the advertising company submitted were qualified so as to include privileges like those on the Subway lines and in the new rapid-transit cars. The offer which came yesterday afternoon was to renew the present privileges on the same terms and conditions, including compensation, as have heretofore prevailed, and this we promptly rejected.

"The Inter-City Car Advertising Company is controlled by the Ward & Gow interests, which has the advertising, newspaper, and vending interests on the New York subways and elevated lines. Our company will now, probably, undertake to carry on the business itself."

The Inter-City Car Advertising Company, according to its President, M. J. Cohn, obtained from the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system the privilege of renewing, each of its leases for five-year periods, on condition notice of such renewal was filed six months before the expiration of each lease.

"More than six months ago the Inter City Car Advertising Company gave notice," he said, "of its intention to exercise its option for renewal.

"The Brooklyn companies have refused to give the slightest suggestion of what terms would be acceptable, and no new agreement has been reached."

Mr. Cohen says his company has offered to submits its books to the Brooklyn transportation companies so that they could determine what was a fair rate for the renewals.

URGES ALL-STEEL CARS.

Report to Service Board to Hasten Change by B. R. T.

Alfred Craven, Chief Engineer of the Public Service Commission, has recommended to the commission that the B. R. T. be required to purchase all-steel cars for the loop line and to reconstruct all its elevated roads, so that they may be used in conjunction with the loop within eighteen months. The commission will act on the report on Tuesday.

When the loop line was opened a year ago last August, the only cars that were available were wooden, such as the B. R. T. uses on its elevated lines. With some anxiety the commission permitted them to be used for temporary operation only, but ordered the installation of an automatic signal system and a speed control arrangement at the Williamsburg Bridge, so as to make collisions impossible.

The company has ordered 200 new steel cars, and is about to order 100 more. They will be ten feet wide, one foot wider than the wooden cars now used on the elevated lines. To equip all the elevated lines using the loop line, 500 cars will be needed, and it is to be certain that these will be ready within eighteen months, by which time the elevated roads can be reconstructed, that the Chief Engineer has brought the matter before the commission.

Drug User Escapes from Hospital.

Michael Doyle, who was arrested Friday at 226 East 124th Street and sent to Harlem Hospital as a user of drugs, escaped from there yesterday afternoon when he was about to be transferred to Bellevue Hospital. He ran out the gate when the attention of the doctors and nurses was taken up with other patients, and, although Dr. Fisberg and several policemen followed him, he got into a negro tenement in 137th Street, between Lenox and Fifth Avenues, and was not found. An alarm was sent out for him.

Brooklyn Day at Frisco Exposition.

Brooklyn Day will be celebrated at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco and the San Diego Exposition at San Diego, Cal., on June 26, this day having been designated by Borough President Lewis H. Pounds. Brooklyn Day was celebrated at the Chicago, Nashville, Buffalo, St. Louis, and Jamestown Expositions.

DOLAN'S 50 YEARS OLD.

Downtowners Celebrate Semi-Centennial of "Beef-and."

On May 1, 1865, Patrick Dolan, now dead, and famous wherever "beef and" are popular, opened a little restaurant in Ann Street, and yesterday afternoon the fiftieth anniversary of this opening was celebrated by a parade, speeches, flag waving, and much merry-making.

The demonstration was given by the New York Letter Carriers' Association, every member of which has appointed himself a sort of patron of Dolan's, and the individuals whom the letter carriers "delighted to honor" were Adam Brede, for the last thirty-seven years head chef of the restaurant, and Peter J. Meehan, the present proprietor.

The parade formed in the City Hall Plaza, with the Letter Carriers' brass band attracting paraders from all quarters. Led by Adam Brede, wearing a shiny high hat and carrying a small American flag, the marchers went to the present site of the restaurant, at 120 Nassau Street, where James McVey, who is nearly 73 years old, and has been a letter carrier for thirty-three years, in that time having eaten, he confessed, 16,500 plates of Dolan's "beef and," called the crowd to order. He introduced Al Tharp, President of the Letter Carriers' Association, who became oratorical in eulogy of the "House of Dolan."

As visible evidence of their esteem, the letter carriers presented to Peter Meehan an elaborate testimonial in which the wish was expressed that "the home of 'beef and' might ever hold the tender spot it now enjoys in the hearts of the downtown business population."

The proprietor was also presented with a large cake, ornate in gold and white icing, the gift of C. T. Lambert, of 124 Nassau Street, and a silver loving cup from M. F. Griffith, of Patterson Brothers, 27 Park Row. After these ceremonies, the celebrators marched to Hesse's Hall, at Frankfort and William Streets, where they celebrated until they had to go home in the dark.

Probably the best-known location of Dolan's was 33 Park Row, where it was for many years. After the founder died, the restaurant became the property of John F. Meehan, his nephew, who was even more famous in the "beef and" business than Dolan. Johnny Meehan died two years ago, and his brother, the present proprietor, took command.

WOMEN GET LESLIE ESTATE.

Nephew Says $1,500,000 Will Be Turned Over on June 8.

The nephew of the late Baroness de Basus, (Mrs. Frank Leslie,) Maynard D. Follin, was at the Wolcott yesterday and denied hints in suffrage circles that he had interposed obstacles to settling up the estate of his aunt.

The interest Mr. Follin had in the estate was arranged, it was learned yesterday, by agreement that he should receive a sum very small in proportion to the estate, but which was satisfactory to him. Mr. Follin says the suffragists should receive on June 8 fully $1,500,000.

"I want to say that I am thoroughly in sympathy with the disposition of my late aunt's estate," said Mr. Follin. If the bulk of it could not come to me, I would much rather that it should go to the woman's suffrage cause than to any other cause or institution I know of. Personally, I am in warmest sympathy with the woman's suffrage movement, which I regard as the next great step in civilization, and I was a charter member of the Men's League for Woman Suffrage in Detroit.

"The estate is in such shape that the executors, William Nelson Cromwell and Louis H. Cramer, will be in position to turn it over on June 8.

"Above all claims, the sum that will thus come to them I know to be at least $1,500,000. The estate is quickly convertible, for it consists of listed bonds, stocks, and mortgages—everything of the very best."

Goethals Sails from Panama.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PANAMA, May 1.—Major Gen. George W. Goethals sailed today for Washington, on the steamship Advance. After he left it was announced that he had gone to confer with the President on the question of the rent of the Canal Zone waters.

Beginning Monday, May 3rd

This is the great Annual Spring Clearing Sale by means of which The Aeolian Company disposes of the immense number of exchanged instruments that come to it in the course of its winter business.

The Pianos

Included are hundreds of Pianos, standard makes and those bearing the most famous names. These have come to Aeolian Hall in exchange for The Pianola. Their high quality reflects the character of the wealthy homes from which they come. Their extraordinarily fine condition denotes that their owners could not play them and hence exchanged them for The Pianola—the piano that everyone can play.

The Pianolas

Also included are hundreds of Pianolas and Aeolian Player-Pianos. These were returned by their owners, not because unsatisfactory, but in exchange for higher-priced models and the wonderful new Duo-Art Pianola, recently put upon the market.

These Exchanged Pianolas and Aeolian Player-Pianos all play the full-scale 88-note music-roll. They have been most carefully gone over by The Aeolian Company's own expert workmen, repolished, put in perfect order, and are all guaranteed exactly the same as when new.

An Unparalleled Opportunity

Never before has such an opportunity been presented to secure a piano or player-piano, at such a low price, quality and condition considered. Scan these lists carefully. The names and prices are significant but only by coming to Aeolian Hall and seeing the instruments themselves, can you correctly estimate their extraordinary value. Remember a purchase from The Aeolian Company is a purchase from the world's greatest and best-known musical instrument concern and as such is an absolutely safe transaction

Lowest Payments

Not only are the prices in this Sale the lowest at which such splendid values can be obtained but the terms you can make are most favorable. A down payment which amounts to hardly more than cartage charges will secure the delivery of a majority of the instruments, and the balance of their prices may be paid in monthly sums you will hardly feel.

Specimen Pianola Values

Aeolian Player-Pianos

These are all Aeolian-built instruments. A majority are new, but in discontinued case designs. They are all 88-note instruments, and are fully equal, in every way, to Player-Pianos you must pay at least $600 for elsewhere.

Another Step Forward

Just about a year ago Repetti (after many years of conservative and substantial progress) began to come into its own, and since then has been making history.

Wars, panics, bad times in general have not retarded this progress and today we are most pleased to announce the opening of another Repetti Shop at No. 2 East 42d Street.

This Shop has been opened for the convenience of our many friends, (whose daily occupation makes the 42d Street location more accessible,) as well as in the hope of creating many new friends.

DEPEW REVIEWS CENTURY'S CHANGES

At Birthday Dinner Given by Montauk Club He Says Country Is Restless.

REFERS TO GROTESQUE LAWS

He Sees in New Idea a Desire to Reverset he Laws of Nature by Acts of Congress.

The Montauk Club of Brooklyn last night for the twenty-fourth time gave a birthday dinner to Chauncey M. Depew, who was 81 years old on April 23. It was the only case on record, Mr. Depew said last night, where a club like the Montauk Club had for so long a time held dinners once a year to show a man they were glad that he was alive and that they hoped he would "keep it up."

Mr. Depew put the case between the militarists and pacifists this way:

"There never were preparations for war of such vast magnitude, and the perfection of the preparations made war inevitable. The irony of the situation is that the line is invisible between the size of armies and navies necessary for national defense and militarism which provokes war."

Later on, when he was reviewing some of the big changes of the past century, Mr. Depew told how great wealth had missed him by a hairsbreadth.

"In 1877 I had an option on a sixth of the Bell Telephone stock for $10,000. I consulted the most famous telegraphic expert in the country, and he advised me to drop it. 'It is a toy and commercially a fake,' he said. Had I followed by strong faith in the enterprise I would today, (if alive, which is doubtful,) be a hundred millionaire."

The former United States Senator touched on the various centenaries which had recently been celebrated, and said that that of trousers had been strangely neglected.

"Among these celebrations of events of the older time," he said, "it will not be thought frivolous in an after-dinner speech, which permits anything fit to print provided that it is interesting, that a hundred years ago trousers were first worn by suffering men.

"The tailor, who appeared in them in Bond Street, London, was assaulted by the mob and arrested by the police for indecency. The Duke of Wellington next tried the fashion, but was turned away from the most important ball of the season at Allwich. His fresh laurels of Waterloo could not same him from the indignation of the British matron. The Governor of the ball said, 'your grace cannot enter here. The guests at this ball must be dressed.'

"The significance of trousers is that it marks the change which came in with the nineteenth century of nerve-racking habits of hurry and haste. Rest and repose no longer prolong and beautify our lives. The otium cum dignitate of Cicero has ceased to be a happy habit. The utilitarian says it cost Cicero his life, for he could have escaped Antony's assassins if he had hurried. The spirit of the age has cheapened literature. It is not that there are no great writers, but there are no patient readers. The pot-boiler drives out the classics.

One political change of recent date, he said, was that union labor under Samuel Gompers, had "secured a department of the Government, a Cabinet Minister, and enacts and defeats legislation as it wills." He continued:

"The new idea is to reverse the laws of nature by acts of Congress. It repudiates the old system of the 'equality of men before the law,' and seeks to secure the equality of all despite differences in character, ability, initiation, energy, industry, and thrift. It tries to do away with competition, because under competitive conditions the best man wins, and then to so control competition which does survive that the lame and the lazy may divide with the strong, capable, and sober.

"A national commission of well-meaning gentlemen to whom business is a mystery are given unlimited power over business to help the weak and check the strong. The wise, experienced and able management of the railroads of the country is as necessary to the public as to the corporations, and yet another law, when it goes into effect, if it is enforced according to the letter and spirit, will make it impossible for any one who has demonstrated his judgment and ability by accumulating property to be a Director of a railroad company. The Hotel De Gink is to be our industrial university and the hobo our ideal of efficiency.

"The statesmen who enact these grotesque laws are men of brains, conscience, and patriotism. They have not been in contact with busines, big or little, and spurn the lessons of experience. They believe that the fault or evils which are found in the transaction of busines are to be remedied by unhatched theories. Nothing disturbs their cocksuredness. Up to 0 I thought that a sign of strength and wisdom. At 81 I doubt."

250 CHILDREN HIT TRAIL.

Billy Sunday's Assistant Leads Meeting of Youngsters.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., May 1.—Billy Sunday gave out his first souvenir tonight. The trail hitting was just starting and the evangelist was wiping the perspiration from his brow, when Martin Scully of Edgewater hit the trail. After shaking Billy's hand he asked the evangelist for something with which to remember the best act of his life. Billy didn't have time to select anything to give the man, so he squeezed the perspiration-soaked handkerchief a little drier and handed it to the penitent.

Billy went back to the diamond this morning and succeeded in having himself branded "robber, thief, bonehead." He umpired the baseball game between the Paterson and Newtown, L. I., High Schools on Dick Cogan's Paterson Atlantic League baseball field. The home team won by a score of 3 to 1.

Homer Rhodeheaver, the choir leader, led a meeting of children this afternoon. He entertained them with stories and illustrations showing the value of living a clean life, and his appeal brought 250 children up the trail.

Sunday's house tonight was the best of the day, about 11,000 being inside the tabernacle and 1,000 or more turned away. He preached on the subject, "Seek and be Saved." Gifford Pinchot was in the audience. One of the early trail hitters was James A. Rowe, City Auditor of Newark, N. J.

Collections tonight were $529.47, making a grand total for the campaign of $22,688.67.

It is expected that on Monday Mr. and Mrs. Sunday will be the guests of Judge and Mrs. Elbert H. Gary for luncheon at their Fifth Avenue home.

SHAM BATTLE AT BENEFIT.

A Dog Show Also at Festival at Friendship, J. R. McLean's Home.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The charitable activities of fashionable Washington neither begin nor end at home. Belgium, Serbia, Poland, and Russia have all shared in the generosity of Washington in the past season, but the greatest of all outpourings, both as regards wealth and work, came today in the Spring festival at Friendship, the suburban home of John R. McLean, with the Washington Diet Kitchen as the beneficiary.

For weeks leading hostesses of resident society have been at work in planning and ordering today's entertainment, which lasted only from 3 to 7 o'clock, but included among its varied attractions a cavalry drill and sham battle, with 300 soldiers from Fort Myer participating, a dog show, exceeding in interest the recent meeting of the Washington Kennel Club; a May pole dance, in which the youthful participants included the daughter of the American Ambassador to Russia, the little Countess Felicia Gizycka; the grandsons of former Senator Henry Gassaway Davis, and sons and daughters of social leaders of the resident and official world; a cabaret performance with professional and non-professional artists, and a fox trot competition, with general dancing.

The marine band dfurnished the music for everything except the drill and sham battle, which were enlivened by the music of the cavalry band that accompanied the troops from Fort Myer.

In addition to these features the lawn of Friendship which has sixty acres of front yard, was the scene of an all-afternoon bazaar. Here were a modern tearoom, under Mrs. George Howard; a flower shop, under Mme. Hauge; a hat shop, under Mrs. John Hancock Merriam; a toy booth, under Mrs. William Littauer, and a table loaded with lamp shades, work bags, and tempting pieces of fancy work, under Mrs. Garrison McClintock.

In opening his grounds and his home for this festival, Mr. McLean is following the precedent established by the late Mrs. McLean, whose first Summer as mistress of this suburban home was marked by a similar entertainment, in which several charities shared. Friendship is occupied only by its owner in the Spring and Autumn, but is never closed and is one of the few Colonial homes left in the District of Columbia.

PUSH POST ROAD BILL.

Westchester Delegations to Urge Whitman to Sign It.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 1.—Senator Slater and Assemblyman Law of Westchester, who have been in Albany all week in the interest of their bill to repeal the Burns law prohibiting the laying of a railway on the Albany Post Road, will bring delegations to the Capitol next week from Westchester towns along the turnpike to ask the Governor to sign the measure.

Governor Whitman was in New York tonight and his secretary also was out of town, but from authoritative sources it was said that the Governor had not gone into the merits of the measure far enough to form an opinion. However, it is pointed out that the same measure was vetoed by Governors Hughes, Dix and Glynn.

The advocates of the measure are residents of towns and villages which seek better transportation facilities. The opponents are the New York Central Railroad, whose lines would be paralleled by a trolley on the post road, and owners of big estate in the vicinity of Tarrytown, who believe a trolley line would detract from the value of their property.

SNAG FOR REORGANIZATION.

Mulligan Refuses to Quit as Conservation Auditor on Pratt's Order.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 1.—Administration "reorganization" of the State Conservation Department struck a snag today when Andrew J. Mulligan, an organization Republican, refused to quit his job as Auditor on the order of Conservation Commissioner George D. Pratt. Mulligan, who has been in the State service for twenty years, says he has been "faithful" and avers that if Mr. Pratt wants his scalp he will have to fight for it.

Mulligan's job pays $2,800 a year. Mr. Pratt wants it for his friend John B. Burnham of New York City, a Progressive, who last Fall ran against Eugene M. Travis for the Controllership. Mr. Pratt was anxious to give Mr. Burnham the position of Deputy Conservation Commissioner, which pays $6,000, but when Pratt's name was before the Senate for confirmation he had to agree to give this plum to Assemblyman Alexander MacDonald of Franklin, who helped make the position for Mr. Pratt when the Legislature "reorganized" the commission by throwing out the three Democratic Commissioners and substituting one Republican.

Mr. Pratt has been busy "reorganizing" since he took office last week. Democrats who walked the plank today to make places for Republicans were: Albert E. Hoyt, Secretary to the commission, $5,000; Matthew M. Hoover, Chief of Republicans, $3,500; Ray Van Avery, Deputy Chief Protector, $2,400.

Republican organization men of Albany, the home of Mr. Mulligan, are up in arms over what they call the indignity forced upon him by Governor Whitman's appointee and are busy pulling wires to persuade Mr. Pratt that Mulligan would be a good man for the "reorganized" department.

MRS. BLATCH'S WAY TO SIMPLIFY BALLOT

Would Have Suffrage Amendment Voted On First and Constitution Later.

ONE INSTEAD OF 3 TICKETS

Says She Foresaw Complications, but Political Leaders Ridiculed Her Warning.

As a way out of the difficulties that may arise because the Constitution may go to the voters in November as a new document, and because the equal suffrage referendum also to be voted upon, if submitted without action by the Constitutional Convention, may be invalidated, Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, President of the Women's Political Union, suggested yesterday that the suffrage amendment be voted upon first and the Constitution be presented to the voters later and at a special election.

This, she thought, would clarify the present situation and make more simple the method of presenting the question to the voters. The Parsons resolution, she believes, is sound, but it would necessitate so many ballots that the ordinary voter would become confused and might decide to vote against the whole question or not to vote at all. Once let the voters decide that woman is entitled to the vote, and she is sure the Constitutional Convention will give it to her.

"A year ago in April, when it was decided to have a new Constitution, it was said that we would get a Constitution and an amendment on the same ticket," said Mrs. Blatch. "No one paid any attention to us. If we had had votes they would have heard quick enough. I saw Mr. Barnes about the matter a year ago, and again in January. The last time I saw him he held up his hands and said: 'I did not take in what you said before.' Having neglected us, they now see they are in a boggle. I know men well, for I have brothers. They regard woman as half a joke, anyway, and when she talks of politics, then they are sure she is a joke.

"I went to Washington and saw Senator Root. He said a similar situation arose in the convention in 1894, and he advised us to go on with the bill in the Legislature, and in some way the convention would arrange the matter."

Mrs. Blatch does not believe that women are going to be cheated out of their right to have the matter presented to the voters. The two platforms, she pointed out, pledge a straight, unqualified referendum. She believes that political leaders will do what they have promised. To recall their promises to them, however, this letter was sent a few days ago by the Women's Political Union:

The Union's Letter.

New York, April 27.

To the Members of the Constitutional Convention:

Gentlemen: We ask to submit most respectfully the following matters for your consideration:

The woman suffrage recommendations the Republican and Democratic platforms passed at Saratoga in August, 1914, read as follows:

Republican—"The resolution of the Republican Convention of 1912 to submit promptly to the voters of the State the question of woman suffrage should be carried out. This is already in course of fulfillment by action of the Legislature of 1913, and we recommend that it be completed in the Legislature to be elected next Autumn. Should the question fail to be submitted in that manner, we recommend that the Constitutional Convention deal with the subject in such a way as to insure the submission of this question to the electors of this State in 1915 as a separate proposition without recommendation for or against by the party."

Democratic—"The Democratic Legislature redeemed the party platform of 1912 in regard to woman suffrage. We recognize the widespread interest and growth in this question, and pledge ourselves to the submission of a constitutional amendment to the voters of the State, either through the act of the next Legislature or of the Constitutional Convention."

May we draw your attention especially to the statement in both these declarations that the suffrage amendment shall be submitted to the electorate either by the Legislature or by the Constitutional Convention? In neither platform was there a suggestion made that suffrage amendments should be submitted by both the Legislature and the Constitutional Convention.

In the Republican platform our interpretation of the intention in regard to the suffrage amendment seems to receive further emphasis by the recommendation that the Legislature of 1915 complete the work of passing the suffrage bill, and only in case it fail to do so shall the Constitutional Convention deal with the subject.

Foresaw Complications.

Undoubtedly these definite declarations on the part of both parties were based upon knowledge of certain Constitutional complications which would arise were another course adopted, and on most honorable determination among the leaders of both parties to avoid jeopardizing a simple and unequivocal referendum on woman suffrage at the general election in 1915.

In the Constitution of the State of New York there is a definite regulation of amendments submitted coincidentally by the Legislature and a Constitutional Convention. We refer to Article XIV., Section 3.—"Any amendment proposed by a Constitutional Convention relating to the same subject as an amendment proposed by the Legislature, coincidentally submitted to the people for approval at the general election held in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four, or at any subsequent election, shall, if approved, be deemed to supersede the amendment so proposed by the Legislature."

Were the Constitutional Convention to submit to the voters a woman suffrage amendment, such recommendation would not supplant that of the Legislature on the ballot, but both would appear, causing obvious confusion.

In view, then, of the pledges of the Republican and Democratic Parties, and in view of the corollaries of Article XIV., Section 3, we feel full confidence that the Constitutional Convention will not complicate the woman suffrage referendum by placing before the voters a second amendment, but will allow the amendment which has passed the Legislature to stand as the sole recommendation before the electorate on the question of extending suffrage to women.

We most respectfully urge, further, that the Constitutional Convention, while avoiding complicating the suffrage issue through submission of a second amendment, shall in the resolutions passed at the end of its deliberations provide definitely that the suffrage amendment submitted by the Legislature, if it carry at the polls, shall be construed as an amendment to the new Constitution, should that be adopted, or to our present Constitution, should the proposals submitted by the Constitutional Convention fail to prevail.

We submit these matters for your careful consideration, with full confidence in your honorable intentions toward the suffrage referendum.

Respectfully yours,
HARRIOT STANTON BLATCH.

Trouble at the Outset.

The situation is causing embarrassment, for the minute the convention begins to deal with Section 1, Article XI., in the present Constitution, which qualifies voters, it has to deal directly with the question, Are women to be given the right to vote?

The Parsons resolution proposes a vote on the Constitution excepting Article XI., Section 1, and that would be one ballot. By another the voter would pass upon the Constitution with Article, XI., Section 1, as the convention proposes it, and still another with the question at issue as the Legislature has decided it. All this would be most confusing.

Mrs. Blatch has a letter from Henry L. Stimson, in which he says:

"The platform of the Republican Party having contained the definite recommendations that the question of woman suffrage be submitted to the electors of the State this year for determination, I shall do all in my power to see that the recommendation is faithfully carried out."

Senator Root, in a letter to the Union, said practically that he was certain he was speaking for the convention when he said that the intention was faithfully to fulfill the party pledges and that the Union could rely upon the members.

James P. Lindsay wrote: "It seems to me that one clear-cut amendment would be the proper thing and would avoid complications."

Mrs. Blatch will go to Albany tomorrow to interview the delegates to the convention and be on the ground to fight, if necessary.

MAY WIN AND LOSE, TOO.

New Constitution Supersedes Any Amendment by the Legislature.

Several leaders of the Constitutional Convention, while not wishing to be quoted by name, expressed the view yesterday that it would easily be possible for the suffragists to win the contest for their amendment at the election next Novemer and at the same time fail to make their victory count.

This situation would arise, it was said, if the convention should approve a policy other than that expressed in the proposed amendment passed by the last two Legislatures.

If the convention should act on woman suffrage it would be bound to submit its conclusion to the voters in the new Constitution. Also under the law, the voters must pass upon the amendment which has passed the Legislatures. But if the voters give a majority to the amendment and also to the new Constitution then the new Constitution woud automatically supplant the amendment of the Legislatures, and the amendment would give way to the new fundamental law.

The clause in the Consctitution providing that the convention's action shall take precedence over every legislative recommendation was written in 1894, by Louis Marshall, it was learned yesterday. This news made his office a storm centre for suffragists yesterday.

"I will tell you why the clause was written," said Mr. Marshall when asked about the present suffrage tangle. "It was written because the Constitutional Convention of 1894 did not like an amendment passed by two previous Legislatures and recommended for submission to the people at the same time with the Constitution.

"This amendment had to do with the method of selecting Judges in Kings County. The members of the Constitutional Convention wanted to handle the matter in accordance with a plan worked out among themselves. And yet they faced the necessity of submitting to the people a plan worked out in the Legislature.

"The result was that I, as Chairman of the committee having the matter in charge, wrote Section 3 of Article XIV. of the present Constitution. This section read:

Any amendment proposed by a Constitutional Convention relating to the same subject as an amendment proposed by the Legislature, coincidentally submitted to the people for approval at the general election held in the year 1894 or at any subsequent election, shall, if approved, be deemed to supersede the amendment so proposed by the Legislature.

Mr. Marshall said that the only case he knew of in which the section came into play, was the case of the Kings County judges it was written to cover.

"And in that case," he said, "it worked beautifully. It did the task set for it."

Mr. Marshall was asked if he meant that it served to count out the Legislature's amendment after the voters had passed favorably upon it.

"Yes it did just that," he said. "It counted out an amendment which passed at the election but was contrary to a provision in the new Constitution which also passed as part of the Constitutional Convention's work."

Mr. Marshall was asked if he would say, as an abstract proposition, whether he believed the present Constitutional Convention had the power and was entirely free to handle a question on which the Legislature had already submitted a referendum to the people.

"I have refused to answer that question for a number of woman suffragists," he said, "and it would not be courteous to them to answer the question for the press."

"Don't you think Mr. Marshall," it was suggested, "that it would be desirable to allay fears so widely expressed by suffragists that the Constitutional Convention plans to supercede their amendment."

Mr. Marshall replied that no secret plan to upset the work of the suffragists could possibly work out, as every move would have to be threshed out on the floor of the convention in the full public gaze.

"There has not yet come before the convention any incident connected with suffrage which would justify alarm or apprehension. The resolution introduced by Delegate Herbert Parsons provides that the Constitutional Convention is to leave the matter as it stands. But that resolution has not reached a stage where the strength of its support can be measured."

It was generally held among suffragists and those in close touch with the Constitutional Convention that Delegate Parsons introduced his resolution as a friendly move to aid the suffragist cause, and that it was his intention to introduce another rseolution, declaring it the purpose of the convention to permit the suffrage amendment, as recommended by two Legislatures, to be made part of th enew Constitution provided the voters should approve it at the polls.

SUFFRAGE DAY CELEBRATED.

Manhattan Parade Interfered with by the March of Labor.

Women formed automobile parades in the five boroughs of New York yesterday to take part in the national celebration of Suffrage Day, and wound up with open-air meetings. There were 200 meetings in the Borough of Manhattan alone. In Manhattan suffrage and labor parades got mixed up, and the women were delayed more than an hour in starting. Finally the two processions marched harmoniously up Fifth Avenue on opposite sides of the thoroughfare. There would not have been a conflict if the suffragists, being assigned to the west side of the avenue, had not had a "melting pot" into which they were to throw their gold and silver contributions to the cause on the east side. Even that did not upset the calmness of the women politicians, and the "melting pot," which was in the form of three big copper pans, was carried by the young women in charge through the labor lines to the middle of the street.

The women's parade formed in Washington Square, where a crowd listened to Mrs. Raymond Brown, the State Suffrage President, make a short address. Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse's "Baseball Nine," composed of young women who are selling tickets for a game on May 15 between the Giants and the Chicago Cubs, in which the women have a financial interest, were out for the first time, and, in addition to the tickets, sold tiny baseball players on little bonbon boxes, tiny baseball bats, and little fans.

The feature of the parade was a stop at 363 Fifth Avenue, the Empire State Campaign Committee headquarters, at Thirty-first Street, to hand out the old gold and silver that is to be melted and bring in good money for campaign purposes. The big melting pot was on the twentieth floor of the building and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Chairman of the committee, and Mrs. Raymond Brown kept open house all day. Mrs. Brown, after her speech at Washington Square, replaced Mrs. Catt, who rode on up to the Mall, where she made a speech from the band stand.

Frederick Nathan was the first contributor, presenting a silver dish. Miss Marion May, Mrs. John Blair, Mrs. Charles Finlay Winch, and Miss Clara Schlinghede, who used Mr. Nathan's silver dish for a melting pot, received more contributions than they could well carry. There was a large variety of pretty and useful donations in gold and silver. Miss Grace Filkins sold many of these at auction, and others will be sold next Saturday. Edith Wynne Matthison gave a ring with five diamonds. There was more than $100 worth of old metal, and also there were watches, spoons, silver dishes, buckles, gold and silver stickpins, and bracelets.

At Fifty-ninth Street the parade disbanded. One automobile went to the bandstand in the Mall, where a band of sixteen girls from Brooklyn played and speeches were made. The Men's League took a stand at Grant's Tomb, and there were large crowds at other meetings at Sherman's Statue, in the Plaza, and in Columbus Circle.

Brooklyn suffragists paraded in the afternoon and heard Controller Prendergast and other speakers express sympathy with the movement at a mass meeting in Prospect Park. At 2:30 o'clock thirty automobiles started from the headquarters of the Brooklyn Woman's Suffrage Party, at 27 Lafayette Avenue, and made a tour through Williamsburg and back by way of Conway Street and Eastern Parkway to Prospect Park. At the bandstand in the park Controller Prendergast and Miss Helen Todd of California made addresses. The suffrage leaders estimated that the crowd at the bandstand numbered about 20,000. A concert was given by the Twenty-third Regiment Band.

The Congressional Union enjoyed an evening of music and a discussion of woman suffrage in the home of Miss M. Cecilia Gaffney at 452 Riverside Drive.

"It's good for you, too, mother"

Time is kind to elderly people who know how to take care of themselves. To be old is no hardship—but to feel old is a calamity.

Many men and women at sixty look and feel younger than others at forty.

They are keen, alert and active.

What a pleasure to meet such people.

Others, along in years, bear the weight heavily. They look and feel tired, are susceptible to disease and have not their former capacity for work or pleasure.

If the years have sapped your strength and vitality—if you find yourself weak, nervous, ailing, poorly nourished—if you receive sympathetic looks instead of enthusiastic greetings—it is time to take Wincarnis.

Wincarnis is a liquid tonic-food. It has been in use in England for over 30 years. More than 10,000 physicians have endorsed it in writing—their letters are on file.

DEFEAT FOR TIGERS EXPECTED BY YALE

Ell's Comparative Analysis of Performances Gives Them Victory in Annual Games.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 1.—Yale's well-balanced track team expects victory by a margin of nearly a dozen points in the opening dual athletic meet of the season next Saturday between teams representing the Eastern universities. Johnny Mack, the Yale coach, who has developed ten Yale teams to compete against the Tigers, admits that Yale, on form, should finish ahead, but he insists that the result of the meet should be close.

Yale's strength in the field events is expected to turn the tide easily in favor of the visiting Elf team. The meet will be held at Princeton, and, in consequence, the result of the track events may be influenced by the enthusiasm of the home crowd. Yale men believe that their field stars, Wesley Oler in the high jump, Hampton in the broad jump, Nick Carter in the pole vault, Paul Loughridge in the hammer, and Big Bill Roos in the shot, should all fetch home first prizes. Divided honors are predicted in the hurdles. Captain Billy Sheddon of Yale probably taking first in the low event and Church of Princeton in the high.

In the sprints and runs honors seem likely to be fairly well distributed, although Yale is likely to pick up most of the odd points. Heaton Treadway, star of the Yale freshmen track team a year ago, and the veteran Tommy Cornell are slight favorites in the hundred-yard dash and Snowden and Moore of Princeton in the furlong event.

Yale has a star of intercollegiate magnitude in the quarter-mile event in Val Wilkie, who is reckoned likely to romp home in that event a winner in close to 49 seconds flat.

Princeton has three stars of the first magnitude in the distance runs, and Hayes, Captain Ian MacKenzie, and Don Morrison. They are likely captors of the half, the mile, and the two-mile races, respectively.

Probably the most sensational race of the day will be run in the half-mile event in which Johnny Overton, who has shown flashes of form indicating a possible intercollegiate winner, will race Hayes, whom Keene Fitzpatrick, the Princeton coach, has predicted would take intercollegiate points when at his best. Overton's running in the Yale medley team race was the greatest factor of Yale's victory in this event last week at the University of Pennsylvania relay meet.

MacKenzie and Morison have exhibited form for two years that entitles them to rank as probabilities for first place in the mile and two-mile events. At the Yale-Princeton meet last year the only first scored by Princeton was MacKenzie's victory in the mile and he defeated Rol Poucher, who will be his closest rival this year.

Although Morrison did not run true to his best form last year and lost to Frost and Clark in the two-mile event, he had ample revenge upon both during the cross-country season. He won the first individual prize in the Yale-Princeton cross-country meet and finished far ahead of all the Yale runners at the intercollegiate cross-country run here last November.

George Brown, captain of the Yale team last year, and winner of first place in the half-mile event in the intercollegiates, where he defeated John Paul Jones, will not run again this year. He is in college, is eligible and expected to race at his favorite distance in all the Yale meets this season. He was attacked with appendicitis at his home in Philadelphia during the holiday recess, but believed that he would recover and be in condition for the Yale Spring meets until three weeks ago when he was compelled to submit to another slight operation. He will be graduated from Yale in June and may never run again.

Yale and Princeton have met thirteen times on the track, although regularly only since 1903, when their dual games were put on an annual basis and there has been no lapse in their meets since then. Their first meeting was in 1896 and they did not come together again till 1903. Princeton has won only one meet to eleven, one being a tie. Till 1907 the dual games were one-sided, but in this year Yale squeezed out victory by the close margin of 54 to 50 points. Yale took the 1908 meet by one-sided score again, but won the games in 1909 by a margin of only 58 to 48, and in 1910 by 59 5-6 to 44 1-6. In 1911, on its home-track Princeton captured its only meet from Yale by the score, 60 to 56. In 1912 Princeton made its closest showing on Yale Field, tieing the Elis by a score of 58½ to 58½. In 1913 Yale won by another close finish, by the score of 60½ to 58½. Last year Yale won in a walkaway meet, by the margin 87 2-5 to 16 3-5.

This year an estimate which, from a Yale standpoint is regarded as slightly conservative, claims the meet by a margin of about 56 to 48 points. A table giving the Yale viewpoint on the outcome of the meet distributes the place winners as follows:

	Y.	P.		Y.	P.
100-Yard dash	6	2	220-Yard hurdles	5	3
220-Yard dash	2	6	High jump	6	2
440-Yard dash	5	3	Broad jump	6	2
880-Yard run	2	6	Pole Vault	5	3
One-mile run	2	6	Hammer Throw	6	2
Two-mile run	3	5	Putting the shot	5	3
120-Yard hurdles	3	5

CORNELL TO BEAT HARVARD

Ithaca Athletes Strong in Distance Races and in Field.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 1.—The Cornell track team is now preparing for the two important dual meets which precede the annual intercollegiate games, those with Harvard on May 8 and Pennsylvania on May 15. Coach Moakley is very well satisfied with the showing his men made at the Pennsylvania relay carnival, and he is now turning his attention toward developing the greatest strength he can for the dual meets. He will not specialize for the championship games until after May 15.

The contest with Harvard is expected to be one of the most important and closest of the Spring. The Ithacans do not expect to make much of a showing against the Crimson in the 440, and they are doubtful about the sprints and the hurdles because the soft condition of the track on Schoellkopf Oval hindered the development of the athletes from Ithaca. Cornell has Ingersoll in the sprints, and he is one of the best in the East, and in addition the Ithacans have Lewis and several other novices. In the hurdles they have five or six likely men, none of whom has actually contested in much serious competition. These include Lukens, Gubb, Millard, McLaren, Starr, and Beebe.

Cornell has no star against Bingham of Harvard in the 440. Lewis appears to be the best man, and he is not in Bingham's class. Should Moakley enter Speiden and Windnagle in the 880, Cornell is bound to give much trouble to the Crimson. Neither of these two men has specialized in this event, but nevertheless both have a record of 1:58 or better. In the mile and two miles the Ithacans expect to make a killing in the dual meet against Harvard and every other college this Spring. Speiden, the winner of the mile race at the championship games last year, is now in fine form. Windnagle is also a strong man in this event, and Souder may also be expected to run a good race. Hoffmire and Potter, the two distance cracks, are rounding into fine shape for the two-mile event, and they should capture the first and second places hands down. In the field events the Ithacans are stronger than they have been in years. They have a wonderful jumper in Richards, who cleared 6 feet 5 inches, and a wonderful vaulter in Foss, who covered 12 feet 10 inches; a great hammer thrower in McCutcheon, and two excellent vaulters in Milton and Van Kennen; ordinary high jumpers in Hanrahan and Warner; good shot-putters in Richards and McCutcheon, a good hammer thrower in McCormick, and fine broad jumpers in Richards, McLaren, Van Kennen, and Priester. With the strength in the field and in the distance runs, the Ithacans expect to pick up enough points so that, added to the possible points in the sprints and hurdles, they will beat Harvard.

MERCERSBURG BOYS WIN.

Highest Point Scorers in Cornell Interscholastic Games.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 1.—On a track made slow by rain during the morning Mercersburg won the Cornell interscholastic track meet here today, with 51 points. Lafayette High School was second, with 18 points, while Hutchinson High School of Buffalo and Keewatin Academy of Minnesota tied for third place, with 12 points each.

Walter of Lafayette High School made a new record for these events of 21 feet 8 inches in the broad jump. Leman of Curtis High School scored second in the broad jump, with 20 feet 10 inches.

Smith of Erasmus Hall passed Trowbridge of Fleischman's High School two feet before the tape in the two-mile race. Point score:

Mercersburg, 51; Lafayette High School, Buffalo, 18; Hutchinson High, 12; Keewatin Academy, 12; Albany High, 6½; Vernon High, 5; Boston Collegiate High, 5; Elmira Free Academy, 4½; Manlius High, 4; Erasmus Hall, 4; Canisius High, 4; Cortland High, 3; Monongahela (Penn.) High, 3; Curtis High, 3; Fleischmann's High, 2; Indiana Normal, 2; Cortland Normal, 2; Auburn, 1; North Tonawanda, 1.

LAKEWOOD MATCH BEGINS.

Forty Enter Qualifying Round for St. Anthony's Golf Tournament.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., May 1.—The annual golf tournament of St. Anthony's Club of New York commenced this morning on the links of the Lakewood Country Club. The course has been reserved for the two-day contest, and about forty players were on hand for the qualifying round, which was run off this morning. The best net score was turned in by F. B. Haight. His card for the course was 87, and his handicap 15, giving him a net of 72. Mr. Haight met with a reverse, however, in his first round, losing to J. G. Batterson 8 up and 7 to play.

The closest match in the first eight was between A. R. Shiland and J. N. Packard, Mr. Shiland winning by 1 up. Other scores:

F. P. Kimball beat Smith, 5 up 3 to play; W. Peli beat V. C. Thorne, 2 and 3.

In the second set, D. A. Loring, Jr., beat R. Hurry, by 2 up. C. Colgate beat H. R. Bacon, 3 up 1 to play. S. C. Clark beat T. Smith, 4 up 2 to play. J. Rice beat D. T. Johnson, 5 up 7 to play.

Scores in the third eight were: T. E. Newbold defeated C. B. Levey, 5 up 4 to play; H. F. Banjamin beat Morris, 5 up 4 to play; F. A. Potts beat R. H. Headley, 3 and 2.

H. J. Geetchins, G. B. Hedges, F. J. Kingsbury, and S. J. Hayes were the winners in the fourth eight. The semi-final and final rounds will be played tomorrow.

Cutler Defeats Coleman.

Albert Cutler defeated Hal Coleman in an 18.2 balk-line billiard match at Daly's Billiard Academy last night by a score of 400 to 124. Cutler ran out his string in eight innings and had an average of 50. His high runs were 133, 76, and 71. Coleman had a high run of 80. His average was 17.

Beginning on Monday night, Cutler will play a five-nights match with Tom Gallagher for 1,500 points. The contestants will play 300 points each evening, the first game being played at Daly's on Monday night, beginning at 7:30 o'clock.

HOW M'GRAW BROKE INTO BASEBALL

Struggled Hard Against Odds, but Has Made Good as Player and Manager.

At the tender age of 16 John J. McGraw signed his first professional contract to play baseball, but he did not play the game as it should be played. While a student at Bonaventure School of Allegheny, Penn., a minor league manager saw in this small, thin urchin the making of a future great, so he signed him for $60 per month. History does not state whether it was cash or promissory notes that John was paid off in. This cruel manager placed little Johnny on third bag, a new position for him. From third base to first looked like a mile and half to this small recruit.

The first baseman was a man about the size of Jess Willard, and in his frantic efforts to grab some of the crazy heaves that young McGraw sent somewhere in his direction, he stretched himself all out of proportion so that his store clothes would not fit him. The Olean team wanted to win a game so they tied a can to little Johnny and turned him loose. Mac found another job with the Wellsville team of the Western New York League. He played shortstop and pitched for that club and made very good, especially as a hurler.

In the Winter of 1890-91 Mac was taken along by Al Lawson, a well-known manager and promoter, on a barnstorming trip through Florida and Cuba. This jaunt gave John some experience and considerable fame. Lawson paid Mac off in compliments, frequently telling him he was the best ballplayer he had ever seen—for a small man. However, little Mac received eighteen offers the following Spring. He signed for the season of 1891 with the Cedar Rapids club of the Illinois and Iowa League, and it was with that team that John J. McGraw framed up his first real record in professional baseball.

In the Spring of that season the Chicago Nationals played his team an exhibition game. With his size and ability to play and kick he made a profound impression on Cap Anson, who wanted to sign him on the spot, but McGraw's manager wouldn't part with him. In his first attempts in the regular season McGraw did some wonderful work with the bat, but his fielding was somewhat erratic. For the first few weeks he used his boot with deadly effect, puncturning his fielding average in a most shameful manner. One day John accepted sixteen chances in a regulation game, six put-outs, and six assists. From that moment the aggressive McGraw began to improve in his fielding, and finished that season with an average of .862, not a very high one, but Mac did not object to making errors for he played the game hard and went after everything.

On Aug. 26, 1891, at Baltimore the now famous John J. McGraw made his début in the "Big Show." The most remarkable feature connected with McGraw's entrance into the big league was his age, for John J. was under 18 when he stepped up and faced Phil Knell, the first big league hurler to have the honor of giving the noted Giant manager his first taste of high-class hurling. Knell sported a fierce mustache and was left-handed, but this did not scare the fiery little Hibernian, for he swatted the first ball pitched for a clean hit. In the twenty-eight games that McGraw played in during his first season in the majors he batted .270, but the only impressive feature about his fielding was the number of bobbies he made. An average of .816 would indicate that the redoubtable John used his boot freely.

Mr. McGraw quit playing the game, that is as a regular ball player, during the season of 1902. From that period John J. has ably filled the position of manager as most every one knows, and especially the managers and players of the other seven teams are well aware of the fact. During the twelve years that John McGraw has led the Giants he has landed five pennants, made the second position six times, third place once. In his first season as manager, and it was only part of the season he wielded the rod, the team occupied a lowly position. A noticeable feature about the management of the great little leader is the small number of hurlers he has had during the twelve years he run the team. Just seven pitchers have done the bulk of the work during that time.

To Enlarge Billiard League

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 1.—Plans announced here today for the Interstate Three-Cushion Billiard League of next season by E. M. Helm, Secretary, call for a membership of twenty-five, an addition of ten over last season. All of the cities in the league last year have retained their franchises, while six of them—Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, and Cincinnati—have taken out additional memberships. Chicago and Detroit have each taken two more and Brooklyn and New York have been granted franchises. More than $3,000 in prize money and a trophy will be played for with a first prize of $1,000. The league will hold its annual meeting at Put-In-Bay June 28 and 29

ROOSEVELT LEAGUE GAMES.

Track and Field Sports, Calisthenics, and Singing in Armory.

Track and field sports, calesthenics, and singing all were featured in the annual games of the Roosevelt Athletic League, composed of schools on the east side from Fourteenth to Fifty-ninth Streets, in the Seventy-first Regiment Armory last night. The competition was not confined to the athletes alone, for more than 5,00 0supporters of the competing youngsters literally raised the roof off the armory with their yells.

Public School 40's representatives, who won the championship last year, were dethroned by the boys from Public School, 27, who rolled up the big score of 62 points. Second place went to Public School 14 with 38, while Public School 19 tied with Public School 40 for third place with 17 points. Last place fell to Public School 18 with 14 points.

Several hundred boy members of the Roosevelt League Glee Club joined in singing the "Hunting Song" and "In Old Madrid," conducted by Dr. Frank R. Rix, and as many more took part in the physical training drill, directed by Mack I. Markett of Public School 27.

No records are kept by the Roosevelt League, but it is a certainty that many of the performances at last night's meet surpassed those of former years. The relay races were exceptionally hard fought. Most interest centred in the half-mile heavyweight relay, which went to the quartette representing Public School 27.

Another feature event was the 100-pound championship dash for overweight or heavyweight boys. W. S. Schlott of Public School 27 was the victory in this event, just reaching the worsted ahead of S. Florentino of Public School 19.

S. Frank of Public School 18 proved the nimblest performer of a big field in the obstacle, and easily triumphed. The summary:

KANAWHA REPORTED SOLD.

Commodore M. F. Plant Said to Have Purchased Famous Yacht.

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 1.—Commodore Morton F. Plant, who recently returned from Florida to occupy his Summer residence, Branford House, Eastern Point, is reported to have purchased the steam yacht Kanawha, and will use the yacht crusing during the coming season. The Kanawha, which is a twin screw, was built for the late H. H. Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate, and carried the millionaire and his friends on many trips between New York and Fair Haven, Mass., where Mr. Rogers resided. Mark Twain often accompanied Mr. Rogers on his trips to and from New York.

The Kanawha made this port her Winter quarters for several years. She was sold to Abram Baudoine, who spent about $100,000 on interior alterations before he put the famous racer in commission again.

SCOUTS ARE AFTER YOUNG RACE HORSES

Only 1,867 Thoroughbred Foals Registered as a Supply for the 1916 Season.

With a total of but 1,867 thoroughbred foals registered as the output of the breeding farms in 1914, and a marked revival of racing this season, owners of racing stables who do not happen to be breeders face a rather serious problem for the season of 1917. About fifty per cent. of the total number of foals are owned by men like August Belmont, H. P. Whitney, Captain E. B. Cassett, Price McKinney, John E. Madden, F. H. Sanford, Foxhall Keene and others who race the produce of their breeding farms themselves. At least five per cent. of the foals have either died, or will do so before the youngsters reach racing age—two-year-olds. Ten per cent. more, as a rule, prove to be worthless as racing propositions owing to accident or physical deficiencies, which make them valueless on the turf. This leaves but 35 per cent., or, roughly, 650 yearlings, which will be in the market this Summer for owners of stables looking for new racing material.

On paper therefore, it looks as if there would be a dearth of young horses for the season of 1917, and men who are now strong for the rehabilitated sport are anxious over the outlook. "Scouts" are already out in the breeding country in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, New Jersey, and on the few farms in this State where the thoroughbred is raised, looking for good individual youngsters or animals which on their breeding promise to have speed when they reach the age for their trials. These scouts are already making flattering offers for desirable yearlings, seeking their purchase at private sale.

Under such conditions the number of youngsters which will reach the public sales will hardly exceed the offerings last season. All-the-year-round racing, from Havana on the south to Winnipeg on the north, has made a market in which the demand is far greater than the supply, the exact reverse of the conditions a decade ago, when the foals numbered about 5,000 annually, and even exceeded that number in two seasons, when the late J. B. Haggin and other Californians sent droves of young thoroughbreds to the market, and so made all but the best bred a drug in the market.

Two new elements further complicate the situation, which bids fair to be good for public breeders, but a source of expense to men who wish to see their racing colors successful. First, there are the newcomers to the sport, like members of the Piping Rock and other hunting clubs on Long Island, the hunting men who are numerous about Philadelphia and Baltimore, and to a lesser degree about Boston. There are estimated to be about fifty of these who are ready to establish racing stables if they can get hold of good young horses, and who are known to be in the market for prospects. Of these newcomers about a score have expressed a desire to secure animals fit for making the foundation for breeding farms on which they may ultimately raise their own racers.

Another class are the men who are going in for cross-country sport, and who are looking for animals of bone and stamina sufficient to stand up under the demands of that sport. These propose to take two-year-olds and school them directly for racing over the obstacles, instead of giving them a preliminary season on the flat, as has been the rule in the past almost without exception. The success which Thomas Hitchcock has met with in following this plan has pointed out its desirability, particularly since his success at the Piping Rock show last Fall, when one of his home-bred two-year-olds proved to be not only a cup winner in the jumping contests, but winner in the class for "hunters suitable to become officers' chargers." Gwynne Tompkins, one of the most successful handlers of jumpers, has announced his intention of following this policy in the future in the development of steeplechasers. Several Virginians who make a business of training these cross-country animals have decided to follow this plan, and W. J. Clothier and a group of young Philadelphians who are going in for the sport are going to try out this plan of creating a class of horses that will be 'chasers, pure and simple, using them in the hunting field in case they do not have speed enough to win "over the sticks" at the big racecourses.

Such being the conditions, breeders look for a far better market for the few horses they will have for sale this season than they had last year, when the question of successful racing seemed to be hanging in the balance.

FISHER INSPECTS SPEEDWAY

Many Sporting and Outdoor Events Planned for Sheepshead Bay Track.

Carl G. Fisher, President of the Sheepshead Bay Corporation, paid his first visit to the Sheepshead Bay Speedway last week and inspected the work of the construction of the track and grandstands. President Fisher, who is also at the head of the Indianapolis Speedway, expressed himself as being impressed with the magnitude of the project and the progress of the engineers and builders.

Now that the preliminary details of the building of the Speedway and the running of the races have been settled and made known to the public, Everard Thompson, the manager, has devoted his attention to the plans for outdoor games, the promotion of which is expected to make the Speedway a great arena of general sports and pastimes. In discussing this phase of the enterprise Manager Thompson said:

"While the Speedway is built primarily for motor racing the grounds will be put to many uses. The oval inside the track, which measures 4,000 feet in length by 1,000 in width and all in level territory, will be developed into an open air contest ground. A portion of this oval will be used for football and baseball fields, tennis courts and a track where athletic meets can be held. Accommodations for many thousands at these sports will be furnished by a large grandstand, built of steel or wood and in sections so that it may be added to or reduced in size as the occasion demands.

"One development of the grounds will be along the lines of aeronautics, and this sport, I believe, will in time equal or surpass motor racing. At Hendon, England, there is a regular daily schedule of flying events, and these events are patronized by thousands. What has been done in England can be done here with the location of the Sheepshead Bay grounds.

"Besides the possible sport uses, the grounds may be used for pageants, military reviews, open-air auto shows, and recently it has been suggested that open-air opera for the people be produced in front of the great stands. But this year we are bending all our energies toward getting ready for the motor races early in October, and we will not have much time for anything else before then."

Panama Fair Polo Ends.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 1.—The universal polo tournament, being held under exposition auspices during the last six weeks, came to a close today when the Southern Department army team defeated the Second Division army four in the finals, for the Peninsula Cups by 14½ goals to 7¾. The Southern Department team won eight of the ten games in which they have participated during the tournament, losing one game to the Midwicks of Pasadena and the First Cavalry team to whom they lost by ½ goal as the result of penalties.

REICH BOXES COFFEY NEXT.

Bout Between Heavyweights at Garden Attracts Wide Interest.

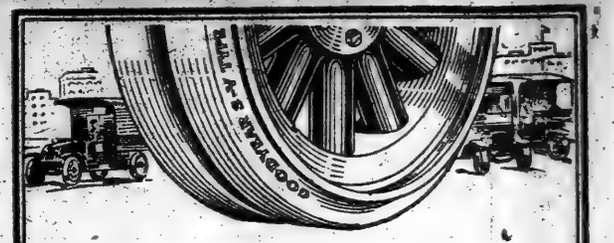
Unusual interest attaches to the ten-round bout between Jim Coffey and Al. Reich which will be staged at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night, it being more marked probably than in any heavy-weight contest in this city in several years. At the root of it all lies the fight at Havana which brought a white champion to this country. Since Willard's victory there has been a boom in the boxing game which has put championship aspirations in the hearts of many of the heavyweights. In a measure the bout Wednesday night will decide between Coffey and Reich as to their right to seek a bout with the new champion. Both men have been eager for that and in itself it should assure a keen struggle at the Garden. In addition there has for some time been a keen rivalry between the two boxers.

Coffey, with a remarkably clean record to his credit has won a big following to his standard. With his one-time rival, Gunboat Smith, on the decline, Coffey undoubtedly stands out as one of the most promising heavyweights in the ring. To make good his claim to a bout with Willard, however, he has to eliminate Reich, the ex-amateur, who during the last year has been pushing his way to the front of the boxing game. The Dublin Giant, however, is confident that he will be able to win decisively within the ten-round limit. He is reported to be in the best of condition and will probably be a slight favorite over his opponent.

Reich has lots of supporters who pin their faith to his ability. Willie Lewis, who is training Reich, is certain that Reich can win easily. He says:

"Reich knows more about the game than Coffey, having had as much experience and a broader knowledge of the finer points of boxing. He is, a harder hitter, faster in his delivery, and a more natural puncher. It will surprise me if Coffey lasts over six rounds. This is one time Reich will be in shape, and, barring an injury, I predict a knockout for him inside of six rounds."

Reich intends to box fifteen rounds today with Colin Bell, Dave Mills, and Jack Hemple at Hawkins's camp, while Coffey will box ten rounds at his camp against three opponents.



Truck Tires Free

Unless the 1915 Goodyear S-V Outwears Any Other

Here is an offer which Truck users cannot afford to neglect. It will settle for you, without any risk, the entire Truck Tire question.

For three months—April, May and June—this amazing warrant goes with every S-V Truck Tire put on under these conditions:

Every Penny Back

Equip opposite wheels, at the same time, one with a Goodyear S-V, one with any other standard make tire of like rated size, bought in the open market.

If the Goodyear S-V fails to cost less per mile than the other, we will return you its full purchase price, making the S-V free.

Mark that—no partial rebate, no mileage adjustment, no replacement. The tire that fails is free. Get this guarantee in writing when you buy the tires.

Never Such a Warrant

Never before has such a warrant been given on any class of tire. If widely accepted, it means with us a million-dollar stake. It is given without reservation against any tire in the field. It covers accidents as well as wear.

Numerous makers claim to build tires as good as the Goodyear S-V. Let us stop arguing in print and in person. Let us compare them on opposite wheels. We have done that already, under every condition. Over 5,000 S-V tires were tested out on trucks before we made this offer. We know to a certainty the results you'll get, barring accidents.

We have worked for eight years on this Truck Tire problem. We built 29 types before arriving at this one. We built 74 models of this S-V type before we attained this perfection.

We give you in it, as compared with others, 20 per cent more available tread rubber. The shape ends bulging, breaking or excessive grind. The compound minimizes friction.

The tire can't creep, as we press it on at a minimum of 50,000 pounds. It can't separate, for the tread, the backing and the rim are welded into lasting union.

LOSING OUR CHANCE, SAYS TRADE EXPERT

American Manufacturers Not Trying for Trade, Philadelphia Observer Believes.

BRITISH CREDIT IS GOOD

Warns Against Taking Unnecessary Precautions on This Account—Effort to Replace German Goods.

The Philadelphia Commercial Museum has received further communications from Dudley Bartlett, Chief of the Foreign Trade Bureau, who is in Europe studying the trade conditions there and the opportunities afforded American manufacturers as a result of the war. An interesting point in one of Mr. Bartlett's letters is the fact that the efforts which have been made by Great Britain since the war began to secure American goods to replace those that were bought from Germany before the war have so far been unsuccessful. There have been several reasons for this, Mr. Bartlett says, and, as in most of his previous communications, he again takes occasion to deal severely with the laxity on the part of the American manufacturers to take advantage of the opportunities which have been afforded them as a result of the war, and also what he terms our unwise methods."

The great stagnation in export trade circles in England, Mr. Bartlett says, are due to several reasons. For one, the very unsatisfactory state of shipping makes it very difficult to conduct any export trade on a paying basis. Another reason is the inability to secure the necessary supplies from British manufacturers in many lines, while a third is that the financial condition in almost all parts of the world are a great obstacle to the development of export business.

In referring to the fact that the American manufacturers are not trying hard for the foreign trade, which they cannot get now, and which may not come to us after the war is ended, Mr. Bartlett says that there is evidently a misconception here as to the ability of exporting firms in London to meet their obligations. Mr. Bartlett assures the American manufacturers that there is very little cause for unusual caution in dealing with such firms for, although their business has undoubtedly fallen off to a considerable extent, they have had a series of prosperous years which has placed most of them in a very sound financial condition.

If American manufacturers would only realize this fact, Mr. Bartlett says, and be a little less strict in the matter of credit, there is no doubt in his mind that a very large volume of business could be worked up abroad, a very considerable portion of which would be permanent.

That German manufacturers will attempt to regain the British trade which they have lost as a result of the war is another matter which Mr. Bartlett points out. In referring to this, he says:

"There is a great difference of opinion in business circles in England regarding the possibility of Germany recapturing the trade which she has lost because of the war. There are some who express the belief that German manufacturers will be quite as strong in the English and colonial markets within a comparatively short time after the close of the war as they were before.

"On the other hand, there are some who point out the circumstance that German manufacturers were able to extend their trade in the first place and to hold it later largely because of the assistance given to them by the German banks. Comparatively few of the German manufacturers in export trade financed their own trade or were able to do so. The liberality of the German banks in this respect has been remarkable. As soon as a manufacturer sold a bill of goods in any part of the world he would be able, on the presentation of his invoice and proof of shipment, to secure at least 80 per cent. of the amount of the invoice from the banks, and, as a fact, I have learned of many instances in which money has been advanced to the manufacturers with which to manufacture goods simply on the showing of orders which they had received from foreign firms.

"How far the banks will be able to continue this system after the close of the war, with all the burdens attending the conflict, and in the event of Germany's losing, the paying of large indemnities which will doubtless be demanded, is a problem the solution of which will determine in a very large degree the ability of the German manufacturers to resume their former commanding position in the export trade. The possible sentimental objection to any German goods in the countries which are now engaged in war with that nation is still another question which can only be answered after the conflict has passed into history. In any event there will be great demands for manufactured goods of all kinds. Here in England there seems to be a general impression that the very best opportunities will be in Russia."

In dealing with what he terms the "unwise methods of American manufacturers," Mr. Bartlett relates the following story:

A Southern manufacturer of hosiery, who had made arrangements for representation with a selling agent in London, received unexpectedly large orders, one especially which his agent in London secured from a prominent wholesale firm.

The manufacturer evidently thought, Mr. Bartlett says, that if one agent could get such satisfactory orders several would be able to do several times as well. He consequently wrote to the wholesale firm stating that he had secured some very good business through his agent, whose name he gave, and asking the wholesale firm if it would suggest to him two or three good sales agents with whom he might make connections, at the same time requesting that no mention of the fact be made to the agent with whom he was dealing.

Mr. Dudley says that it was only a matter of a few days before the agent in question was in possession of the manufacturer's letter, and very shortly after he sought the American trade chief and inquired whether that was our customary way of doing business.

The result of this affair, Mr. Dudley says, was that the wholesale house, suspecting the good faith on the part of the American manufacturer, decided to buy no more goods from his mill and the agent refused to longer act as the representative for the American firm. The manufacturer's lack of good faith, Mr. Dudley writes, will also be known throughout the trade centre in England, for there is an association of manufacturers' representatives in London at whose meeting matters of this kind are freely discussed.

ENDS CITY HALL CHAPEL.

Mayor Acts to Stop Use of Basement for Marriage Ceremonies.

The abolition of the marriage chapel which has existed for more than twenty years in the basement of the City Hall, where thousands of couples have been married, was approved yesterday by the Mayor. The Board of Aldermen adopted a resolution ten days ago rescinding the resolution which had authorized the City Clerk to appoint two clerks to it without pay.

A certain amount of scandal had grown up about it on account of the fees which were sometimes exacted, and it was decided to get rid of it. It will be replaced by a room set apart for civil marriages in the Municipal Building which will be next to the office of the City Clerk.

H. L. HAYDEL A SUICIDE.

Another Added to Long List of St. Louis Real Estate Tragedies.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 1.—Henry Louis Haydel, 55 years old, President of the Haydel Realty Company, shot himself to death in his handsome home here today, following an investigation of his affairs by the Real Estate Exchange.

Haydel, a member of an old French family, yesterday gave A. P. Erker a check for $4,500 to take up a deed of trust which he had sold to Mrs. Erker. The check was returned marked "insufficient funds." The recent collapse of seven of the largest realty dealers of St. Louis has been because of fraudulent deeds of trust. Haydel's widow and his mother are on the verge of collapse.

On the heels of Haydel's suicide, Charles C. Nicholls, President of the defunct Nicholls-Ritter-Goodnow Realty Company, was indicted for embezzlement of $7,000 from John B. Westermayer and Jesse T. Daniel, Secretary of the Daniel Realty Company, was indicted for obtaining $650 by false pretenses from Dr. William B. Temm. Both indictments had to do with fraudulent deeds of trust.

A. H. Frederick, prominent in church and social circles, was elected President of the Board of Aldermen on April 6. Election night he disappeared to Milwaukee. A few days later he returned. He tried to commit suicide on the train. He was indicted, and on April 25 pleaded guilty to real estate fraud, and was sent to prison for ten years. In the meantime C. C. Crone, another prominent churchman and realty dealer, was arrested. He was indicated and is awiting trial. Just prior to this Richard Goodnow, another realty man, pleaded guilty to forgery in a minor degree and was sentenced to two years.

YOUNG HUSBAND ACCUSED.

Charged with Demanding $250 to Prevent Wrecking of Trains.

William Arthur Sexton, 18 years old, who last September married the daughter of a clergman at Beacon, N. Y., was arraigned yesterday before Commissioner Houghton on a charge of having used the mails in an endeavor to extort $250 from the officials of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, by threatening to wreck freight trains.

Post Office Inspector Thomas F. Fitch alleged that on April 17 Sexton mailed a letter at Newburgh to the New Haven superintendent at Waterbury, Conn., demanding that on April 28 he send a letter addressed to W. H. Sanborn, Waterbury, Conn., general delivery, enclosing $250. If he did not do that, the letter said, "we will wreck freight trains on your division and raise the money to $2,000." If the superintendent intended to forward the money he was to insert a personal advertisement in a New York newspaper reading "Sanborn, O. R., N. Y., N. H. H. RR."

W. J. Donnelly and Thomas A. Ryan, railway detectives, posted a dummy package. At the Waterbury post office the postmaster said he had been instructed to send all mail for W. H. Sanborn to the Newburgh post office. The detectives followed the package there and arrested Sexton as he called for it under the name of Sanborn.

Post Office Inspector Fitch said that Sexton denied that he had any associates or ever intended really to wreck freight trains. His wife, who was expecting a baby, and he was in need of money. Sexton waived examination and was sent to the Tombs in default of $2,500 bail.

MITCHEL REJECTS THE ROCKAWAY BILL

Also Vetoes Aldermanic Measure, with Apology to the Fusion Majority.

CALLS IT GERRYMANDER

Mayor Says Secession of Fifth Ward of Queens Would Deprive City of $1,000,000 a Year.

Mayor Mitchel vetoed yesterday the bill for the reapportionment of the Aldermanic districts and the bill for the secession of the Fifth Ward of Queens to set up the City of Rockaway. In refusing to sign the Aldermanic bill the Mayor expressed his regret, as he had worked in such harmony with the Fusion majority of the Board of Aldermen, at having to refuse their request, especially as it would have done much to re-elect them. However, he accuses the bill, in reference to Brooklyn in particular, as being a gerrymander in favor of the Republican majority.

The main fault that the Mayor finds with the Rockaway bill is its financial arrangement. He believes that it would deprive New York City of $49,000,000 of the security for its debt and a revenue of $1,000,000 a year in taxes, while he considers the proportion of the debt which the new city would take over would be inequitable.

In the veto message on the Aldermanic bill the Mayor admits that there was great need of reapportionment of the city into new Aldermanic districts, but asserts that the districts set up by the new bill show a wide disparity in population and in voters, and the bill is consequently opposed to the interests of good government. Then he states:

Unfair in Brooklyn.

"It has often been the practice, in establishing Aldermanic districts, for the political party in power to seek to district the city in its own interests. Apparently the present bill follows precedent in this regard, but it is a precedent so unsound that even the knowledge of existing gross inequalities, some of which are corrected by the proposed measure, does not lead me to give the bill my approval. While in the Borough of Manhattan the apportionment has been made comparatively equitably, one needs only to look at the plan of the districts in the Borough of Brooklyn to realize that in many of the proposed Aldermanic districts political, and not public interest, influenced the assignment of voters.

"It is with personal regret that I feel compelled to disapprove this bill. The harmony with which I have worked with the present majority in the Board of Aldermen makes me feel this keenly. The approval of this bill has been urged upon me, upon the ground that it would tend to secure the re-election of the present efficient and serviceable Fusion Board of Aldermen. Greatly as that result is desired by me, and much as it would be in the interest of the continued effectiveness of the city administration, I do not feel that I am at liberty to seek that result through the questionable means of this bill.

In his veto of the City of Rockaway bill the Mayor points out that the Fifth Ward of Queens has been part of the city since Jan. 1, 1898, and that since then $916,000,000 of bonds have been issued on the credit of the city. The assessed valuation of the taxable realty the city would lose by the secession would be about $61,000,000, and the plan of financial adjustment proposed by the bill, he says, is unworkable.

It would cut down the borrowing capacity of the city by $4,900,000, but would not reduce the standing debt by one dollar. It would deprive the city bondholders of $40,000,000 of their security, and it would decrease the city's income by $1,000,000. Then the Mayor discusses the method proposed for the apportionment of the existing city debt between New York and Rockaway by "items." This, he says, would be unworkable, and proceeds thus to criticise it:

Not Fair to City at Large.

"The proposers of this measure offer as a plan of solution that the property owned by the City of New York outside the Fifth Ward should be appraised and then the property in the Fifth Ward at present owned by the City of New York, appraised, and balancing these appraisals against debts thus secure the proportionate credits on the proposed dissolution of the partnership, on the basis of six-tenths of one per cent., which is the ratio that the assessable property the Fifth Ward bears to the assessable property of the entire city. This plan is inherently bad.

"When the old City of New York was merged with the other boroughs on the first of January, 1898, it held approximately $400,000,000 of real estate. All the other boroughs outside of the former City of New York combined did not hold more than $80,000,000 of property. The proportion at present is probably even greater than that on consolidation. To say that the Fifth Ward in Queens should have any right or interest in Central Park and the parks in the Bronx, all of which were owned prior to consolidation, and that be considered in the dissolution of territory, is beyond reason. The framers of this bill recognized the inequality of their plan of adjusting accounts because when it was ascertained that on a separation the City of New York would owe the Fifth Ward many millions of dollars, they found it necessary to insert in the bill that the Fifth Ward should pay the city at least $500,000 on dissolution. By this admission they defeat the plan that they now propose as a settlement of accounts."

Then he points out that as one-third of the land under water, which is included in the projected Jamaica Bay improvement, would go to Rockaway City, the improvement would be impossible, and the large amount spent by the city in preliminary work would be lost. Then the Mayor attacks the arrangements in the bill for the collection of taxes and assessments, and says:

"There is no provision in the bill whereby the city could enforce the payment of all the present outstanding assessments and taxes on property situated within the Fifth Ward, amounting to large sums."

For these reasons the Mayor refuses to accept the bill.

WELD METHODIST UNION.

Bishops Accept the Overtures of the Southern Church.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 1.—The Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church in session here today accepted the overture of church unity made by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The resolution of acceptance was adopted by a unanimous vote.

The formal response to the overture must be made by the General Conference, the bishops said in the announcement of their action to be sent to the applying church body. In their resolution the bishops say they are prompted to make the folowing declaration:

"We are convinced of the essential unity of the two great Methodisms in doctrine and in life and that their essential unity must in due season express itself in outward and organic form; without presuming to pronounce on the terms of the union, we declare ourselves earnestly in favor of the organic union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and such other Methodist bodies as may share our common faith and experience. Moreover, we declare ourselves in favor of such a union on terms that shall provide an ample and brotherly protection for any minority."

FORGES FLEEING MAN TO GIVE WIFE $19,000

Kreyer, About to Desert Family, Arrested on Ship with $95,000 in His Pockets.

HAD JUST RECEIVED LEGACY

Magistrate Decrees He Shall Give One-fifth to Family, and He Pays In Cash.

Burton Kreyer, carrying the proceeds of a legacy of $95,000 he had inherited from the estate of his father in Germany, was interrupted in an attempt to reach Germany yesterday, when detectives took him from the Italian steamship Caserta, and arraigned him in the Domestic Relations Court on a warrant obtained by his wife, who asked the court to compel her husband to share a part of his wealth with her for the support of herself and their children.

Mrs. Avilda Kreyer, who lived at 142 West Ninety-eighth Street, told Magistrate Harris that her husband had neglected to provide for the support of herself and their two children since he received his legacy through the banking house of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, 15 William Street, following the death of his father in June. Mrs. Kreyer's father stood beside her and announced that he had also a financial claim against Kreyer, but the court said he could not help him to collect it, suggesting that he would have to institute a civil action.

"In expectation of my son-in-law getting a share of the estate of his father I contributed to the support of his family, and I am surprised that he should attempt to slip away to Europe without seeing me," remarked Kreyer's father-in-law. Magistrate Harris pondered a moment and then announced:

"You, Kreyer, must give your wife one-fifth of your legacy; that will be about $19,000, to be put in trust for her and the children. After the children become of age you may regain the principal. You had better give your wife $500 immediately for her needs."

Kreyer tugged at a large roll of bills in his pocket and removed therefrom ten fifty-dollar bills, which he passed to his wife. Then from a larger package of money in another pocket he counted out $18,500, and handed it to the court clerk. After a whispered conference with her father-in-law, Kreyer removed a few other notes from his pocket treasury and paid him.

Kreyer, who was born in China of German parents, met his wife at San Juan, Porto Rico, where they were married on June 9, 1906. They have since lived here. For a time Kreyer, who says he speaks and writes seven languages and holds a degree of Doctor of Medicine, taught languages to private pupils.

After he had settled the court proceedings Kreyer smilingly announced he would now make his third attempt to go to Germany by way of Italy. Some days ago he sought to get away on the steamship La Touraine of the French Line, but was held up because he did not have a passport. He had a luxurious cabin suite on board the steamer Caserta of the Royal Italian Line when Detectives Donovan and O'Brien of the Second Branch Bureau arrested him on the warrant obtained by his wife.

"I'm perfectly willing for him to go now if he wants to," said Mrs. Kreyer, who left court without asking her husband why he had not invited her and the children to accompany him.

EARTHQUAKE RECORDED.

Seismographs Indicate Severe Disturbance—May Be in Japan.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Earthquake shocks, described by scientific observers at Georgetown University here as unusually severe and probably destructive, were recorded on the seismograph there today between 12:12 A. M. and 2 A. M. The tremors continued almost two hours, and reached greatest intensity at 12:45 A. M., at an estimated distance from Washington of 5,500 miles.

LONDON, May 1.—A severe earth shock was recorded early this morning at the observatories at Cardiff and the Isle of Wight. The indications recorded suggest that the centre of the disturbance was in Japan.

STEEL FOR RUSSIA BEING BOUGHT HERE

Unable to Get Supplies from Its Allies—One Contract Placed Amounts to $25,000,000.

BIG ORDERS FOR SHRAPNEL

Westinghouse Company Confirms Report of $20,000,000 Contract —Domestic Orders Fall Off.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, May 1.—War orders and rumors of war orders are the principal factors in the steel business. It seems as if the Russian Government is unable to get supplies from its allies, and, lacking the German market to secure products, has turned all of its steel business over to manufacturers in the United States.

The latest report is to the effect that the Pressed Steel Car Company has received orders from the Russian Government for railway equipment which will aggregate $25,000,000. While it was reported that the Pressed Steel Car Company was to make shrapnel, on closer investigation it has been learned that the Pittsburgh company has been asked for deliveries on steel cars. As the makers of steel cars in this country are at a standstill, the Russian Government can secure deliveries quicker here than elsewhere at relatively low prices.

Domestic demand for steel plates has fallen off, hence foreign orders are welcome. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has contracted for 5,000 to 6,000 tons of heavy plates for the 144 locomotives that will be built at the Altoona plant. The Pennsylvania Company will also require 15,000 tons of plates for 2,100 steel cars to be built at Altoona. Plates continue to be quoted at 1.20c. Pittsburgh.

The steel bar market is very firm at 1.20c, as a result of inquiries and orders for shrapnel and shells for the allied European countries. Guy E. Tripp, Chairman of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, confirmed the report to the effect that his company had taken a large contract for shrapnel. It is estimated that the order will aggregate $20,000,000. The Westinghouse Company is having an extension built to its plant for the purpose of taking care of the order.

The Chicago Pneumatic Tool Company has ordered its two plants at Franklin, Penn., placed in readiness to start on an order for 300,000 shells. Deliveries will extend into July, 1916. Thus all sections of the country where plants would otherwise be idle are operating on war material. The Wheeling Mold and Foundry Company has taken a subcontract for machining steel bars for shells.

As a result of the increasing demand for bars, agricultural implement makers are entering the market and orders for six months to one year's delivery are expected to be placed early in May. The Pennsylvania Railroad will require 4,000 tons of bars.

The structural demand has increased slightly. April lettings for fabricated material will be equal to, if not greater than, during March. The last week of March 35,000 tons of structural contracts were placed in the district of New York, principally for subway and elevated roads. The Pennsylvania Railroad is inquiring for 3,000 to 4,000 tons of shapes. Throughout the other sections of the country structural orders have been for small tonnages.

President E. R. Kinsey of the Board of Public Service of St. Louis will advertise for bids May 10 for 24,000 tons of steel for the approaches to be used in completing the new free bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis. Shapes are held at 1.15c to 1.20c, according to delivery.

Quotations on sheets are wavering. This is especially true of galvanized sheets, which had been held at 3.40c. Automobile builders are among the heaviest buyers in this class. Otherwise there has been a falling off in demand. This is expected to be temporary, however. Preparations are under way by three makers of tin plate to increase plant equipment, and contracts for extensions will be let soon. Tin plate mills are operating to capacity, with orders for future delivery holding up well.

In spite of the rush of wire mills, prices are not steady. Domestic demand is slack and the market is supported by foreign shipments. Nearly all the wire plants are operating to capacity. Nails are quoted at from $1.55 to $1.60 a keg.

Specifications have arrived in this country for 100 locomotives for the French Government. Locomotive builders have a large idle capacity and competition is keen for the order. The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad is in the market for twenty locomotives, the Western Maryland for ten, and the Seaboard Air Line for ten.

The Rock Island Railroad has put out inquiries for 35,000 tons of standard rails. The Minneapolis & St. Louis has ordered 5,000 tons of rails, and the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville, 2,500 tons. The Westchester County (N. Y.) Traction Company has placed an order for 2,500 tons of girder rails with the Lorain Steel Company.

The W. P. Snyder Company, Ohio Iron & Steel Company, and the Andrews & Hitchcock Iron Company have accepted orders for 50,000 tons of basic iron from the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company, and 10,000 tons of gray forge for delivery up to Oct. 1. The W. P. Snyder Company has taken an order for 10,000 tons of bessemer for foreign shipment. The American Steel Foundries Company has taken 10,000 tons of basic for its St. Louis plant, and are inquiring for similar tonnages for the Alliance, Ohio, and Sharon, Penn., plants. The Union Steel Company, Canton, Ohio, took 10,000 tons of basic from a Cleveland furnace. The American Rolling Mill Company, Middleton, Ohio, has contracted for 6,000 tons of basic from the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company. Many minor lots have been sold by Southern makers, and Foundry No. 2 has been advanced from $9.50 to $9.75 a ton, Birmingham, on inquiries and orders. Sales to New York State melters were also numerous, and New England foundries have also contracted for considerable tonnages.

The arrival of approximately 1,000 tons of ferro manganese from England relieved the strain upon steel makers. At least 2,000 tons of ferro is expected in this country within a week or ten days. Continuous shipments of ferro are expected during the Summer. Most of them are from Liverpool.

DEFICIT IS $102,216,551.

April Shortage Alone $13,950,000, Nearly Double a Year Ago.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The deficit for the fiscal year has passed the $100,000,000 mark, as noted in THE NEW YORK TIMES. The daily statement of the Treasury for the close of business yesterday shows an excess of ordinary disbursements over ordinary receipts for the year of $102,216,551.96, the month of April alone increasing the deficit by over $13,950,000. The deficit for the year ending with April a year ago was $34,347,488.19, and the deficit for April alone that year was $7,096,881.05.

Receipts from customs to date for this fiscal year have been $174,000,000 as against $247,000,000 to the same date last year; ordinary internal revenues to date this year, $270,000,000, as against $256,000,000 to the same date last year; corporation and income tax, $13,00,000, as against $6,000,000 to the same day last year; and miscellaneous $57,000,000, as against $43,000,000 to the same day last year. Net ordinary disbursements to date for this year amount to $618,000,000, as against $588,000,000 to the same day last year.

The net balance in the general fund at the close of business yesterday was $20,815,000.

ELEVATED EXPRESS CHANGE

Fast Trains on Second Avenue to Stop at 86th Street.

In spite of the opposition of the residents of the Bronx and the opinion of the Interborough, the Public Service Commission has ordered the latter to make Eighty-sixth Street an express station on its Second Avenue elevated line. Commissioner Wood, who represents the Bronx, was the only commissioner to vote against the order.

The residents of the Eighty-sixth Street neighborhood were strongly in favor of elevated express trains stopping there, while the Bronx contingent asked that one line might be kept free from express stops, so that they might have one really fast run up and down town. The Interborough in consideration of the proximity of Eighty-sixth Street and Second Avenue to the Third Avenue and Lexington Avenue lines was also inclined to favor the omission of the express stop.

BANK ANSWERS CONTROLLER

Special Demands by Williams Oppressive, Riggs Institution Declares.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Another issue of fact was raised today between Controller of the Currency Williams and the Riggs National Bank, which is seeking an injunction to prevent the Controller from taking certain alleged illegal and oppressive measures. Mr. Williams last night issued a statement in reply to comment attributed to officials of the bank in which he said "that no portion of the additional information called for in the new reports of condition has been asked from the Riggs National Bank during the examinations which have been made of that bank beyond the information which every national bank examiner has for years past been required to get from every national bank at the time of each examination." Today, replying to Mr. Williams, the bank issued this statement:

"The statement given out by the Controller of the Currency last evening is intended to convey the impression that the Riggs bank has refused to furnish or has objected to furnishing his office information all banks have been required to and do furnish. The Riggs National Bank has had no controversy whatever with Controller Williams concerning any of the many calls he has made generally on banks, or with respect to the frequent changes and additions which he has made on the statement blanks, and it has freely and fully responded to every such general request, besides numerous special demands since he came into office. The effort thus to segregate the Riggs bank, to put it in a class by itself, as being in opposition to those calls for information which the Controller may lawfully make on any and all banks, is an attempt on his part to obscure the real issue between the Riggs bank and the Controller.

"The Controller may do many things, even within the law, which are burdensome and vexatious, but the Riggs bank does not and never has offered opposition to them. What the Riggs bank has complained of is that, broad as his lawful powers undoubtedly are, Controller Williams has exceeded them so far as it is concerned, even to the extent of violating the law. He has literally been a law unto himself, without restraint or limitation. It was to keep Controller Williams within the law that the Riggs bank was compelled to resort to the courts."

NEW NATIONAL BANKS.

April Applications Include 12 State Institutions Desiring to Change.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The Controller of the Currency anounced today that in April twelve State banks applied for permission to reorganize as national banks and fifteen applications to organize new banks were received. In the same time thirteen applications were approved, nine of them being for the conversion of existing institutions. In the month thirteen banks, with a total capitalization of $1,120,000, were authorized to begin business.

On April 30, 1915, the total number of national banks organized was 10,712, of which 3,120 had discontinued business, leaving in existence 7,612 banks, with an authorized capital of $1,075,186,175, and circulation outstanding secured by United States bonds of $722,193,808, and by other securities $6,582,581. Circulation to the amount of $139,016,678, covered by lawful money deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, on account of liquidating and insolvent national banks and associations which had reduced their circulation, is also outstanding, making the total amount of national bank circulation outstanding $867,793,067.

FIGHT RULES ON PARCELS.

Labor Men to Protest Against Interborough Restrictions.

The new regulations of the Interborough with regard to the carrying of bulky parcels on the Subway and elevated trains have aroused the indignation of the Central Federated Union.

A public hearing is to be held by the Public Service Commission on the matter on Wednesday morning, and the union has appointed Ernest Bohm, Corresponding Secretary; James P. Holland, Vice President of the New York State Federation of Labor, and Robert rBindell, business agent of the Dock Builders' Union, a committee to attend and represent the views of the union.

According to a resolution which they have adopted, the labor men condemn the attitude of the Interborough in trying to bar passengers carrying bundles, necessary tools and appliances, as "it tends to work a great hardship upon working men and women, who cannot use any other but the cheapest means of travel from their homes to work."

EDWARD D. LINDSEY DEAD.

Pioneer Architect Once Held Chair of Applied Art at Princeton.

Edward Delano Lindsey, who was one of the first architects of the city to plan a fireproof structure, died late Friday night at his home, 175 Amity Street, Flushing, L. I., from paralysis. He was born in New Bedford, Mass., March 30, 1841. He was graduated from Harvard in the class of 1862. Later he entered the School of Fine Arts in Paris, where he remained until 1866, when he returned to Boston.

Two years later he began his career as an architect in New York, and in 1868 designed the French Theatre and the Drexel Building, almost the first two of the fireproof buildings in New York. His work on the renovation and redecoration of the Equitable Life Insurance Building in Manhattan attracted the attention of some of the officers of the insurance company, who were also trustees of Princeton University, and in the following Autumn he was appointed to the newly created Chair of Applied Art at Princeton.

Mr. Lindsey resigned the professorship in 1880 and returned to the practice of architecture in New York. He designed large mercantile buildings, including the Consolidated Exchange and the American Lithograph Building. He left his wife and a daughter, Mrs. E. L. Harrison.

BRITISH IN EGYPT NOW UNHAMPERED

Annual Tribute and Fiction of Turkish Sovereignty Wiped Out by the War.

HOSTILE KHEDIVE OUSTED

Germany Held to Have Rendered Britain a Great Service by Tempting Turkey to Fight.

Sidney Low, author of "Egypt in Transition," writing in The London Daily Chronicle, says:

"When the Germans cajoled and bribed the Young Turks into declaring war on the Allies they did a great service to the British Empire. The Turks, with their brave troops commanded and organized by Marshal von der Goltz, may give us a little trouble in and about Egypt for the moment, but they will save us an immensity of trouble in the time to come. For they not only won over Enver Pasha, but also that shifty and restless potentate, Abbas Hilmi, ex-Khédive of Egypt, who has now openly thrown in his lot with our enemies. The salutary result is that we get rid both of his Highness and his suzerain at one stroke. Egypt becomes a British protectorate, the Turkish sovereignty is renounced, the Turkish tribute will be paid no more, the Khédive is deposed and permanently banished, and the civil government is transferred to the hands of a very competent Anglo-Indian High Commissioner. So the Turk finally disappears from Africa, after having been there some centuries too long, and Egypt is at last incorporated with the British Empire.

"What this means can only be thoroughly grasped by those who have been familiar with the political system which has prevailed in the Nile regions for the last thirty-two years. Our position has been uncomfortable and unsatisfactory from the beginning. Egypt has never as some people imagine, 'belonged to' Britain, nor has it been an independent State. It has been a nominal dependency of Turkey under a ruler who was supposed to exercise sovereign powers, subject to the claims of his suzerain, the Ottoman Sultan. Hampered by our respect for various 'scraps of paper,' we have endeavored conscientiously to maintain that anomalous situation. We went into the country with the declaration that we would neither conquer nor annex it. We bombarded Alexandria, and sent in an army under Lord Wolseley in 1882, ostensibly to 'restore the authority of the Khédive,' which was being upset by a military revolt. And it is as supporters of the authority of the Khédive that we have remained. We did not, in form, govern Egypt. We merely told the Khédive and his Cabinet how in our opinion it ought to be governed.

"The English troops were not supposed to constitute a British garrison; they were only an 'army of occupation' left in the country to protect it against disorder and disturbance. The British officers in the native regiments were merely 'lent' to the Egyptian War Office for service in the Khedival Army, which was technically a branch of the Turkish forces, with Turkish badges and Turkish insignia. I remember how the fact was brought home to me one day when I watched a review of the Khartoum garrison by the Sirdar. Fresh-faced young British officers in khaki rode along the ranks, a Sudanese band was playing an English popular melody, a red and gold standard, with the crescent gleaming on it, fluttered in the sun. Of a sudden the battalion stood to attention, as the Colonel rasped out sharp words of command in a language I could not recognize—naturally, for he spoke in Turkish, a tongue of which neither he nor his men probably understood a syllable beyond the few phrases they have had to learn by rote. And they learned them because all these English-speaking officers and Arabic-speaking soldiers were nominally in the service of his Imperial Majesty, the Sultan of Turkey, who was the paramount Lord of Egypt and of the Viceroy he graciously permitted to rule in Egypt—with our assistance.

"So the fiction was maintained all through. The English civil officials were paid and employed by the Khédive, not by England; they are not supposed to carry on the Government, but only to inspect and report, and to 'advise' the Egyptian Ministers; and even the British Agent General has been theoretically only the Chief Adviser, though, of course, an adviser whose counsels the Khédive and the Ministers are expected to follow. Because we could not retire from the country, without leaving it to chaos, and because we could not annex it, without breaking our pledges, we fell back on this compromise.

"In the hands of an exceptionally able body of men, Edgar Vincent, Auckland Colvin, Scott Moncrieff, Milner, Cromer, Kitchener, Wingate, the 'unworkable' system has worked. But it has always been difficult. Instead of keeping a single eye on the needs of the country and the population the British officials, from the Consul General downward, have had to deal with the susceptibilities, the opinions, and the prejudices of the nominal rulers, the Khédive and the Ministers; and they have been terribly obstructed by the Capitulations under which the subjects of foreign powers enjoyed exceptional and undesirable privileges. These Capitulations interfered seriously with the administration of justice and finance; but we could not abolish them, for they were treaties made in the past with Turkey, and still binding upon a Turkish province.

"Then there was the personal character of the Egyptian sovereign to be taken into account. His position was not altogether agreeable, and perhaps it is not surprising that Abbas II. never quite reconciled himself to it. The descendant of those vigorous Albanian soldiers, Mehemet Ali and Ibrahim Pasha, always chafed under his tutelage, and was unable to recognize, like his more cautious predecessor, Tewfik, that without the British Army of occupation and the British prestige, his throne would have been toppled over long ago. Abbas was perpetually seeking occasion to assert himself, quarreling with his English advisers, and sometimes inviting sharp snubs and plain-spoken remonstrances from Lord Cromer and Lord Kitchener. He had been intriguing with Constantinople and the Young Turks for years, and I do not think that at the British Agency in Cairo they could have been much surprised to find him drawn into the great German web of anti-British conspiracy.

"Well, he is gone now, and with him the Turkish suzerainty is gone too; and the whole cumbrous old entanglement will now be straightened out into a sensible workmanlike administration, such as we maintain in India. Whether the Khédiviate, in any form, will continue to exist one does not know. There is understood to be a respectable and well-affected uncle of Abbas II. in Cairo, and it is possible that he may be permitted to occupy the titular throne pending the final reconstruction. In any event the real authority will centre in the British High Commissioner or Viceroy, with a native Executive Council and legislative assembly to assist him.

"The double Government will disappear; there will be no more inconvenient Egyptian Ministers engaged in constant friction with their English 'advisers.' The Capitulations will be rescinded by agreement, so far as concerns our Allies and the neutral States, and simply 'denounced' in the case of Germany and Austria, who have forfeited all treaty rights in common with their Ottoman ally.

"No longer will adventurous Greeks and shady Levantines be able to laugh at the police and defy the law courts under the protection of the European Consulates; no longer will sedition hide itself behind the folds of the foreign flags. Egypt will be better governed, her people will be more prosperous, and the reforms for which our officials have been sighing will be smoothly accomplished. The social and economical condition of the country will improve, and it will remain a contented and, we hope, tranquil British dependency, (if we take care to keep a tight hand on German bribery and Turkish intrigue,) gradually assuming a larger and larger control over its own internal affairs, until such time as it may be fit to choose between becoming completely independent or entering the circle of British self-governed dominions."

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Low pressure still persists throughout the country, but with a general rising tendency, except in Nebraska and the North Pacific States. There are various centres of disturbance west of the Missouri River, and general rains have fallen over this area, except from Kansas southward, with some snow in Nebraska, Utah, Northern Arizona, Western Colorado, and Northwestern Wyoming. There were also local showers in the Central Valleys, the East Gulf and South Atlantic States, and rains in New York and New England.

Temperatures are moderately high in the South and low in the Northeast. Over the central portion of the country they are nearly normal, but west of the Rocky Mountains and in Montana they are low for the season; decidedly so over middle and southern districts.

Snows and rains will continue Sunday over interior districts from the Rocky Mountains westward, and there will be rains in the Coast States that will probably continue Monday. There will be showers Sunday or Sunday night in the Plains and West Gulf States and Sunday night or Monday in the upper Mississippi and probably the lower Ohio Valley. Elsewhere the weather will be generally fair Sunday and Monday.

It will be somewhat cooler Sunday or Sunday night in the Plains States and the middle Mississippi Valley and probably warmer by Monday west of the Rockies. Over eastern portion of the country temperatures will not change decidedly.

Winds for Sunday and Monday along the North and Middle Atlantic Coasts will be moderate to fresh north; South Atlantic Coasts, moderate, variable except north and northwest off the Carolina Coast.

FORECASTS TODAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York—Partly cloudy Sunday; Monday fair.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Generally fair Sunday and Monday.

Western New York—Partly cloudy Sunday and Monday.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

Announcing the Annual May Sale of White

THE SPIRIT OF SAVING IS IN THE AIR. More than ever before Macy's has striven to win the approval of the careful, critical shopper, both as to style and as to price. It sounds like a platitude, but really we have never succeeded so well in making this Sale the event of the year.

Those who have attended our previous Sales have learned to expect much of Macy's in the way of unusual economies and hope for even more this year.

THERE ARE MORE THAN SIXTY THOUSAND SEPARATE GARMENTS IN THIS SUPERB COLLECTION—an assortment that affords such ample scope for selection at every possible price that, whatever her taste and whatever her means, every woman who comes will go away satisfied and delighted.

The turns of the market have been so carefully watched for months preceding this sale that we can safely say our cash resources have brought to Macy's every worth while purchase and desirable opportunity in White Wear that occurred this year.

The great buying influences of this Store and our time-tried policy to BUY AND SELL ONLY FOR CASH are exemplified in every department of this sale. The economies are as satisfying as the styles are unusually pretty.

The advantage of shopping early during the two weeks of the sale will be quite obvious to those who have been guests of this Store at previous Annual Sales of White. SAVINGS OF SUCH MAGNITUDE ARE BOUND TO ATTRACT THE CROWDS.

BARNES ON STAND PERHAPS THIS WEEK

Roosevelt Forces Near Close of Their Case with the Albany Printing Charges.

CITY OFFICIALS CALLED

Vice and Gambling to be Inquired Into—Surprises Looked for When Barnes Is Cross-Examined.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 1.—Although the Barnes-Roosevelt libel trial had gone over until Monday this was a busy day for the attorneys for the two principals. With the prospect of the defendant's case being completed some time next week, the lawyers began preparations to handle the Barnes side. That it will take as long for Mr. Barnes to get his case before the jury as it is taking Mr. Roosevelt there seems to be little doubt.

With the introduction yesterday of testimony relating to the Albany printing ring, with the hope of showing that Mr. Roosevelt was justified in uttering the alleged libel on Mr. Barnes, the Colonel's forces reached the beginning of the end of their case. John M. Bowers, the senior Roosevelt counsel, does not intend, however, to wind up the defense without a final punch. Today he subpoenaed a number of the Albany County and city officials who testified before the Bayne Committee that investigated the Albany printing ring and social and gambling conditions there. These officials will be called to tell under oath just what they told the Bayne Committee.

Part of the Bayne report, which scored Barnes unmercifully, already has been admitted into the record by Justice Andrews, but it was produced solely to show mitigation of the alleged libel. In order to prove justification, witnesses will have to appear and testify under oath as to conditions with which they were familiar. The testimony of these witnesses is expected to be one of the big features of the trial.

William M. Ivins, head of the Barnes legal forces, is mapping out his line of campaign to combat them. Mr. Ivins is familiar with the Bayne proceedings. He was retained by both Mr. Barnes and Edward W. Cantine, the then Commissioner of Public Safety of Albany, to represent them at the investigation. The committee refused to allow counsel to appear. Because of this Mr. Barnes refused to produce his private books or to answer any of the hundred questions asked him. The committee obtained an order from Justice Kellogg to show cause why he should not answer or go to jail. An appeal was taken to the Appellate Division, which reversed Justice Kellogg, and the Court of Appeals upheld the Appellate Division.

Barnes to Take the Stand.

For this reason Mr. Barnes never testified before the committee. If he takes the witness stand here in his own behalf, as he is expected to do, Mr. Bowers hopes under cross-examination to bring out some highly important testimony. According to Mr. Barnes's counsel, he is entirely willing to take the stand and answer any question asked him, as it will be in a competent court, and he will be represented by counsel. His private books, as well as those of The Journal Publishing Company and the J. B. Lyon and Argus Companies already have been subpoenaed, and they will be produced in court. Likewise the records of the State Controller's office during the time under question have been produced under a court order, and expert accountants are working on them, getting figures for easy presentation to the jury.

According to Mr. Barnes's friends here, the evidence produced by the Bayne Committee, if it is gone over at this trial, is likely to result in a "big flare-back." Mr. Barnes's counsel will maintain that the Bayne report is the best possible proof that an alliance between crooked business and crooked politics did not exist between Barnes and Charles F. Murphy or the machine Republican and Democratic legislators for the very reason that it was by Democratic votes that the investigating committee was appointed and the printing and other scandals subsequently revealed. Mr. Ivins will attempt to show that, instead of Barnes and Murphy being in collusion, Murphy was using all his power to discredit and destroy Barnes politically.

The ruling of Justice Andrews, which allowed the Roosevelt forces to introduce that part of the Bayne report dealing with the printing scandal, was a big victory for the Colonel, although it was offset in a measure by the failure of his counsel to get into the evidence that part of the report dealing with gambling and vice conditions. To draw the line between the two matters was a delicate problem for Justice Andrews, and, according to lawyers here who are watching the case, his ruling from a legal standpoint alone was eminently fair and justified. The Justice unquestionably has a clear grasp of all the intricate legal points of the case and his manner and methods have made him many admirers. Not a word of complaint has been uttered against him by counsel of either side, and those who know the Justice well predict that his charge to the jury will be a masterpiece.

An important ruling made by the Justice in favor of the Barnes side is the statement of the Justice yesterday that the defendant had not produced any proof as yet that Mr. Barnes was guilty personally in the State printing matter.

Dolan Again on Stand Tomorrow.

When the trial is resumed Monday Michael V. Dolan, General Manager of the Albany Argus Company, will continue his testimony regarding printing contracts which his company, in which Mr. Barnes held stock, obtained from Mr. Barnes's own concern, the Journal Company. Mr. Dolan is a reluctant witness, and it is only by deft and patient work that Mr. Bowers is able to get him to reveal what he is after. Mr. Dolan testified before the Bayne Committee frequently his memory has to be refreshed by reading what he testified to there.

In order to make their case complete and show evidence of fraud on the part of the plaintiff, the Roosevelt counsel have still to connect up certain lines of evidence. The Justice has ruled that fraud has not yet been shown which would justify the libel, and is allowing much evidence to be put in along this line, with the expectation that the defendant's attorneys will make the proper connection later. The lawyers say the proper connection will be made when their case is complete. The calling of former Albany County and city officials, while not unexpected, will make it impossible for the Roosevelt forces to complete their case before next Wednesday at the earliest.

Much time has been saved by the stipulation which both sides agreed to, at the request of Justice Andrews, and which made it unnecessary for John A. Hennessy, William Sulzer, and a number of other witnesses to testify about graft and rottenness in the State Government. Mr. Hennessy expected to be a whole day on the witness stand himself. He was much surprised when

THE WESTERN RAILWAY AWARD.

Ninety-eight railways of the West, and 64,000 of their employes, are dissatisfied with an award which was to have improved their relations, but which, in fact, has only sufficed to give a year's notice of another wrangle. It is easy to say that the award must have substantial soundness for the reason that it displeases both sides. That is not the attitude of the public, which wished to see both sides satisfied, if that were possible. The public is always prone to favor that wage-earning class which is so large a part of itself. Lately the public has relaxed in its attitude toward the railways, partly through perception that they have been harshly treated and partly through understanding that the railways' usefulness was being undermined by an obligatory increase of costs and limitation of earnings. Here is another award compelling the railways to pay out more money and without any thankfulness on the part of those who will receive it. What is the public to think of it?

It was the object of the award to make a decision which should let the public know what to think upon a subject which was an appeal both to the public conscience and to the public interests. The award is as displeasing to the public as to those between whom it makes the unwelcome decision. There is no more agreement among the arbitrators than there is between the disputants. There would have been no decision at all if the Chairman had not waived his opinions. Both sides filed formal dissents criticising alike the award and the method by which it was reached. This is worse than a settlement which does not settle. It unsettles the process itself as well as the questions submitted to the process.

Inasmuch as the men received about one-quarter of what they asked it would seem that they can be right only in that proportion. Ought it to be said that they are trying the public patience too far? There have now been several attempts to please the railway men. They objected to the Erdman act, submitting railway disputes to the Commissioner of Labor and the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a third impartial member. The men said that the subject was too important to be left to a single vote. Accordingly was substituted the Newlands act, providing for a preliminary conciliation by three members, and reference to six if the dispute could not be settled by three. Always there has been the alternative of voluntary adjustments, which has seldom been used, although invariably the alternative method has been unsatisfactory. It is surprising that this should be so, because the men have never been defeated. Wages have risen as invariably as rates have been reduced, the railways suffering both ways. Thus arbitration has come to mean to the railways an order to pay more money without an opportunity to earn more. The wage arbitrators and the rate fixers have been independent bodies, although rates and wages are halves of the same problem. Nearly half of the total takings of the railways is paid in wages and two-thirds of the total operating cost is chargeable to labor costs. The railways are in difficult circumstances. Yet labor not only wants more, it wants in this case thrice as much as the award allows.

While the public observes this it observes also how it becomes true. In this proceeding the men want more wages because the railways are increasing gross earnings. The railways put millions into more powerful engines, and the engineers want more money because the engines haul more freight. Thus an investment for the public service becomes a source of cost instead of increased earnings. The railways put millions into power brakes so that they need employ fewer brakemen and yet operate with greater safety. Then the men get [illegible] forbidding the reduction in number of train hands. In many ways the railways substitute machinery for labor and labor demands more pay, although hours are shorter and conditions of employment are easier. The public observing these things may conclude that the railways serve the public better than the men serve the companies. The supreme thing is not the wages of the men, nor the profits of the railways, but the service of the public. The railway service must not be interrupted, that is the main thing. Yet the threat of interruption of railway service is the weapon by which these wage controversies are won. Railway wages have been forced upward through the worst period of unemployment we have known, while railway earnings have been falling at a rate never before experienced. Are the men prudent under such conditions in condemning both the wages paid above the standard in other industries and the methods by which the law has sought to secure them against injustice?

WALLACK'S.

The playhouse called Wallack's, which is to be demolished this week, was never so surely a revered institution of New York as was the earlier Wallack's, at Thirteenth Street, or the still earlier one of Broome Street. The younger WALLACK had passed his prime and lost something of his grip, as both actor and manager, before the removal uptown. For the preservation of the traditions of his house, as it turned out, he might better have remained at the old stand, for the theatre he deserted was not only profitable but fashionable many years afterward as the place of the most notable star performances of the era. Some pleasant memories of the admirable Wallack way of doing things, however, are associated with the theatre which closed its doors for all time after last night's ceremonies, and others of good achievements under the control of other managers. It was a notable playhouse in its way.

The wonder is not that it should go now but that it should have survived so long and have been, in its very last hour, the scene of commendable and aspiring dramatic effort. It has been out of the theatre district many years, and too frequently quite out of the knowledge of a generation of playgoers to whom the name, restored to it after the consulship of ALBERT M. PALMER, meant nothing more than a name. Nevertheless, there was a sentimental interest in the ceremonial farewell of Wallack's to a host of old stagers, to whom the incident recalled an era of sound and wholesome drama, of a stage which served as a criterion alike of speech and manners, of actors honestly trained to their vocation by long and faithful application; who had been at pains, in short, to acquire an art which might give pleasure to others.

OUTSIDE OF WALL STREET.

Just as the rise of the new rich "war stocks" became insulting to the intelligence of those who had not supplied their necessities there comes another sign of that prosperity which is universally desired if only it is the right sort. In the week ended April 24 the bank clearings of the country showed an increase over last year. This is almost as surprising as the rise in the industrial stocks which are the most immediate beneficiaries of the war factor. There is need of caution about sympathy with those who are making the money the world outside the United States is wasting, but there may be deep and general gratification at the increase in the bank clearings. Nor is it subject to discount because due to the new speculation, for that is contrary to fact.

There is an increase in the country outside New York, due to an increase in each section except the Pacific and the South. In the West there are gains running above 80 per cent. In the New England States there are increases of between 20 and 30 per cent., due to the briskness of the war industries. The decreases in the South are no novelty, and are easily attributable to the depression through the planters getting more cotton than they expected or than the market could digest for a while. The cotton market is better now, so good, in fact, that the planters are in the glooms again lest they should be ruined once more with another big crop, which they are unable to resist the temptation to plant. The decrease in Pacific Coast bank activities is too small to affect the country, the totals being the smallest and the least reflective of the current factors of value.

It would be easy to pick out depressed localities, but that is another story. The interpretation is that the conservative side of the prospect of prosperity is appearing. The country is not prospering because some low class shares are rising more than is consistent with the peace of mind of sober observers, but because the country in general is feeling the stimulus which began with them. The locomotive and equipment companies which are supplying some hundreds of millions of steel products and many related industries cannot build a fence about their activities. Shells are mostly labor, the cost being in the making rather than in the material. That distributes wages generally and stimulates the buying power. The materials must be transported, and that stimulates the carrying industry. In short, no industry can prosper to itself alone, and the proportions of the war trade suffice to stimulate others in a degree first disclosed by the bank clearings. The railway industry is not yet showing gains, but it is showing a decrease of losses, and needs only to continue along the same road to bring courage to many depressed investors. Investors' courage can be capitalized into the basis of something better than the war trade, and that is nearly all the situation now needs.

It is just as dangerous an error to be committed to depression, to be set against the signs of better things, as it is to be too hopeful.

COURT HOUSE FINANCES.

The large sum required to pay for the land and building of the new Court House will not burden the city's budget in any one year. A law was passed permitting its distribution over a term of years, so that the huge sum will not be hard to meet. Controller PRENDERGAST's purely functional disapproval of the expenditure is understandable, but the people of this city will undoubtedly support the Mayor's argument that, having gone so far, we cannot afford to go back. The land must be paid for and we must have a new Court House. The one we are to have will be worthy of the city, and, in spite of its cost, which has not yet been precisely estimated, will undoubtedly be worth the money. It will completely transform its neighborhood, and that part of the property which is not to be used for the building or its approaches can eventually be sold for much more than it cost.

Of course, a body of experienced business men might have managed this matter much more quickly and profitably than it has been managed. Business men have not been consulted. Lawyers and Judges, Commissioners and politicians have all had their say, and the result is better than might have been expected. We are to have a Court House now, and we may hope that the prospect of the actual establishment of a new and accessible civic centre will inspire both the State and Federal Governments to intelligent action looking to the erection of buildings in the neighborhood for their own use.

MR. GARRISON'S PLANS.

The energy Secretary GARRISON is devoting to his program of military improvements indicates that he has been encouraged to hope for more respectful and sympathetic treatment in the next session of Congress. If he believed that his suggestions would again be passed over with the scant courtesy he received in the House of Representatives in the last session he would scarcely be at pains now to enlist the co-operation of all the higher officers of the army in the work of planning such improvements in the land defenses of the nation as study and experience suggest. His new Board of Survey will receive reports from all department commanders and will base upon them recommendations to be submitted to the General Army Board. The new policy which will be based on the result of these processes will have the approval of the President before it is submitted to Congress.

The tone of the remarks made by Senator CHAMBERLAIN, Chairman of the Senate's Military Committee, when action was taken by that body on the last Army bill, indicated that the Senate, at least, will be ready at the next session to vote intelligently on reasonable plans for the strengthening of our defenses. In view of the manifest feeling of the people all over the country, it is not likely that the House can continue to treat with contempt well-devised and moderate plans to put our army and our coast defenses in a better condition. Mr. GARRISON's plans have been well laid. He will devote all his time before the next session to the formation of "a well-"thought-out, well-wrought-out mili-"tary policy." Such a policy will be a welcome novelty in a country whose military affairs have too often been managed in a haphazard way and confused too frequently with politics. If Mr. GARRISON succeeds in having his policy sanctioned by Congress next Winter, he will have achieved one of the greatest victories of the present Administration.

PAGEANTS.

We are beginning to hear a good deal about the forthcoming Brooklyn Pageant, and it is good news that there is a pageant mistress to pull the various parts of the great spectacle together and give it a coherence commonly lacking in public spectacles. A few friends of art have worked courageously over the problems of pageantry in America, but we are not yet sufficiently accustomed to the thought of outdoor theatres to make the thing always successful. Art in the indoor theatre is making headway; out of doors it is content to be merely illustration.

How easily a different conception of the pageant could be brought about is recognized by every one who visited the millenary celebration at Hertford, England, grandmother of our Connecticut Hartford, last Summer. The celebration took the form of a pageant, quite naturally, since the place was England. The episodes of a thousand years of history were sifted for those that lent themselves best to the picture. An expert in historic costumes who also was an artist was chosen to design the apparel, the pageant master wove the different episodes into a spirited history of the life of the community, and the whole town busied itself with the necessary work of realising the various scenes. When the affair came off it was a pageant, not a circus. It was not staged, it was lived. And the beautiful color made it like a fine tapestry.

In his sympathetic paper on JOHN BUNNY in the Magazine Section of THE TIMES today Mr. KILMER wishes that the films would take up the pantomime, the "Old English pantomime." An immense service would be rendered to the public if the films also would take up English pageantry as Sir HUBERT HERKOMER before his death was planning to record it. The sight of the simplicity and naturalness of the English ideal would help us to keep away from the circus ideal, which is always imminent in our spectacles. There are a few things, such as pageants and cheese, in which the old English flavor is really necessary.

UNTRAINED NURSING.

An Argument for the Standardization of the Profession.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I ask the courtesy of a little space to answer the letter of Mr. Bailey, published on Monday, as to the demand for a law standardizing the profession of nursing in New York. As one of the Board of Trustees of one of the largest hospitals in this city, and as one of the incorporators of another, I can speak of the matter with knowledge.

The present agitation is to standardize nursing by restricting its practice to those who comply with the formula recommended by the State Board of Regents. This formula is the requirement that "a trained nurse should be trained"—not a very radical proposition, surely. Its adoption has been opposed by the "correspondence schools," which make a large profit every year by issuing diplomas to young women having only such theoretical knowledge of nursing as can be derived from books and letters, and no actual practical and necessary hospital or sick-room experience whatever. Naturally, the correspondence schools resist any change. Their position is not unlike that of the "medical colleges", which fought successfully for some time the law which did away with the issuance of "doctors' diplomas," which were sold for $50 or $75 and enabled a man without any practical knowledge or training to act as a physician.

What the State is asked to do in the case of nurses is only what it has already done and is doing in the case of doctors, lawyers, teachers, druggists, dental surgeons, chiropodists, and veterinarians. There is, and there should be, no objection to any woman who wishes to do so from acting as a nurse. There have been "nurses" since there have been women, and this would be no world at all if there had not been. But a "trained nurse" is something different, and the plan (which must ultimately, of course, be adopted) to limit the use of the words "trained," "qualified," "registered," or "certified" among nurses to those who have become proficient by arduous and thorough study and actual hospital experience is not unreasonable.

As the "doctors' colleges" could not bar the way to legislation for the protection of the public health through physicians, it is not at all likely that the correspondence schools will be able to prevent legislation for the standardization of nursing. In the present prophylactic treatment of disease a good nurse is, in many cases, as indispensable as a good doctor; but the profession of Esculapius is a very old one; that of Florence Nightingale is new.

To Omit the Fleet's Entertainment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is noted in the press that a sum of $30,000 is being raised by the citizens of New York City for the entertainment of the officers and men of the Atlantic Fleet during the visit in May. But New York, with its theatres, museums, skyscrapers, and thronged streets, is a wonderful entertainment in itself for men who have spent considerable time gazing at the desolate hills of Guantanamo. In these times of stress and strain, when there are so many calls for aid, does it not seem that this sum of money could be put to better use?

As one suggestion, it could be turned over to the Seamen's Church Institute to assist in paying off the $150,000 debt. Thus it would be of permanent benefit to those men who see most of the hardships of the sea with few of its pleasures. If the opinion of the fleet could be obtained it would undoubtedly be in favor of this or some other similar use of the money.

Mixing the Arts.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would like to ask Mr. Ward a few questions concerning his letter to THE TIMES on April 29 about the music in the public parks. Mr. Ward is correct about the expert committee which he appointed last Spring to select the band and orchestra directors of Central Park. But how about the smaller parks? I am under the impression that the committee never examined or picked any of the musical directors who received the appointments. With the exception of a very few, all these conductors were strong members of political clubs. In other words, the music at the smaller parks last Summer was of the same order as in former years—very good political bands, but poor music.

REFLECTIONS.

High on a pine-crowned, eastern mountain peak,
I stand atop the dull-hued world and seek
Life's meaning and Love's motive in the sky,
Even as craggy slopes, beneath my tread,
Seek their reflections in the river's bed,
Where, as the swiftly rushing waters glide,
Showing now blue, now golden in their tide,
The cloud-cold or the sun-warmed hill-breasts brood
Over the torrent's mumuring solitude.
So through the shade or sunshine of my days
I, soon or late, discern the guiding blaze
Of trails that lead me straight from sun to sun.
So soon, indeed, are Pain and Sorrow done
And Joy come tripping after them like Spring
Hard on the heels of Winter's lingering,
That we need never lose the flower-strewn ways
If we fight [illegible] in the Race we run!

RELIGIOUS EMOTIONS.

Farmington, Conn., April 25, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the Magazine Section of THE TIMES there appeared an article entitled "Is Sex the Basis of Religion." "The sexual feelings," the author is quoted as saying, "are the levers which control religious emotion, and so-called religious convictions are but a cryptic, mystical, dogmatised elaboration of them." The remainder of the article quoted from is in the same tone.

Whether the statement above be a valid induction from even the most extensive data on religion is open to serious question; certainly there is nothing to warrant such a conclusion in the few, undigested excerpts from the article that are presented in THE TIMES. Moreover, it may be said with some confidence that but few serious students of psychology and religion have accepted such a proposition as that "sex feelings are the levers which control religious emotion, and so-called religious convictions are but a cryptic, mystical, dogmatised elaboration of them." Indeed, the whole method and the presuppositions of the sexualizing psychologists invite destructive criticism. There is always risk, however, that such articles, such conclusions, and such a method may be taken by many to be in some sense authoritative, or that there will be unconsciously assimilated their implicit depreciation of religious feeling. The following extract from William James's "Varieties of Religious Experience" is, therefore, not only apposite, but a salutary corrective, from one of unimpeachable ability and disinterestedness, of what may be called the ithyphallic psychological school.

James says ("Varieties," &c., pp. 10-12):

A more fully developed example of the same kind of reasoning (that spiritual value is undone if lowly origin be asserted) is the fashion, quite common nowadays among certain writers, of criticising the religious emotions by showing a connection between them and the sexual life. * * * As with many ideas that float in the air of one's time, this notion shrinks from dogmatic general statement and expresses itself only partially and by innuendo. It seems that few conceptions are less instructive than this reinterpretation of religion as perverted sexuality. * * * It is true that in the vast collection of religious phenomena, some are undisguisedly amatory—e. g., sex-deities and obscene rites in polytheism, and ecstatic feelings of union with the Saviour in a few Christian mystics. But then why not equally call religion an aberration of the digestive function, and prove one's point by the worship of Bacchus and Ceres, or by the ecstatic feelings of some other saints about the Eucharist? Religious language clothes itself in such poor symbols as our life affords, and the whole organism gives overtones of comment whenever the mind is strongly stirred to expression. Language drawn from eating and drinking is probably as common in religious literature as is language drawn from the sexual life. We "hunger and thirst" after righteousness; we "find the Lord a sweet savor"; we "taste and see that he is good." * * *

In fact, one might almost as well interpret religion as a perversion of the respiratory function. The Bible is full of the language of respiratory oppression. "Hide not thine ear at my breathing; my groaning is not hid from thee; my heart panteth, my strength faileth me; my bones are hot with my roaring all the night long; as the heart panteth after the water brooks, so my soul panteth after thee, O my God." * * *

These arguments are as good as much of the reasoning one hears in favor of the sexual theory. But the champions of the latter will then say that their chief argument has no analogue elsewhere. The two main phenomena of religion, namely, melancholy and conversion, they will say, are essentially phenomena of adolescence, and therefore synchronous with the development of sexual life. To which the retort again is easy. Even were the asserted synchrony unrestrictedly true as a fact (which it is not), it is not only the sexual life, but the entire higher mental life which awakens during adolescence. One might as well set up the thesis that the interest in mechanics, physics, chemistry, logic, philosophy, and sociology, which springs up during adolescent years along with that in poetry and religion, is also a perversion of the sexual instinct—but that would be too absurd. Moreover, if the argument from syncrony is to decide, what is to be done with the fact that the religious age par excellence would seem to be old age, when the uproar of the sexual life is past?

The whole passage may be read with refreshment. It is wit and common sense, logic and psychology, all in one.

EDWIN W. FRIEND.

Oldness, Not Age.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to the question of your correspondent: Why is it so difficult for middle-aged people to get employment, I suggest that age is not the chief handicap. The lack of adaptiveness is the greater drawback. Adaptability is a quality to bank on. It erases years and keeps one up to date. If people beyond thirty disregarded the fact of years and kept themselves limbered up mentally and physically and ready to meet the changes that are constantly going on in the business and social world they would find it less difficult to get employment.

Men and women are in their prime from thirty to fifty years and away beyond that age, and the reason that so many of them are counted out is because they allow themselves to think and feel and act and look old. They live in a past rut. "Settled habits" are not always an advantage. Elastic habits, when honestly applied, carry one further along the road to success.

Eleventh-Hour Legislating.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of the most important subjects to be considered by the Constitutional Convention is how to prevent the Legislature from going through the farce of passing about two-thirds of the bills before it in the last few days of its session—after spending three to four months doing almost nothing. The last few days of the session are devoted by the leaders of both houses to fixing up bills which are rushed through without proper consideration and in most instances without any understanding of their contents by a majority of their members or the public, and in many cases by emergency messages from the Governor.

This latter provision of law has been greatly abused in latter years and should be either greatly limited in its application or revoked altogether.

Higher Wages?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the address by John E. Gardin, Vice President of the National City Bank, published in THE NEW YORK TIMES of April 30, 1915, Mr. Gardin states that in his opinion wages of labor in Europe will be lower as a result of consumptive powers of Europe and the rest of the world being reduced by the effects of the present war.

Is it not equally probable that the opposite effect will follow? Europe will undoubtedly inaugurate a policy of reconstruction immediately peace is made. Mr. Gardin gives $46,000,000,000 as the total of destruction of wealth to date, as quoted by some prominent authorities. Will this not offset the decrease in consumption, assuming, of course, that Europe will rebuild when peace is declared? In addition, there will admittedly be a smaller supply of labor, which would naturally have a tendency to raise wages.

KUNO MEYER SONNETIZED.

A Colleague Adds Fuel to the "Gott Mit Uns" Flame.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with interest Kuno Meyer's letter to President Lowell which appeared in this morning's issue of your paper, and also the sonnet which has so stirred his wrath.

I received a day or two ago a letter from an English friend who is an instructor in King's College, London, in which he speaks of the German professor and incloses a sonnet of his own, which appeared in The Morning Post, beside which the Harvard prize poem seems almost flattering.

I quote what he says in his letter concerning Herr Meyer, and also the sonnet:

I believe Kuno Meyer is in Chicago. Have you ever heard of the gentleman? I met him in County Mayo in 1889, when he urged me to take up the study of the Irish language. He was for thirty years a professor in Liverpool University, and had received honorable recognition for his scholarship, dignity, kindness, and hospitality. But what does the man do but try to raise sedition in Ireland—extending, I believe to the attractive proposal that Irish soldiers taken prisoner shall fight for the German Army. He has been, of course, removed from his professorship and from the roll of Freemen of the City of Dublin, and I dare say little more will be heard of him. The Morning Post has made a specialty of K. M., and I was rather pleased that it thought fit to publish this sonnet:

TO KUNO MEYER.

When we foregathered by the Celtic lamp,
Whose flickering flame you fanned to make me glow,
In that sweet West—'tis half my life ago—
How could I read you right? Not yet the cramp
Of things that stoop had crooked you: Teuton stamp
On brow or tongue was none; talked e'er a foe
So friendly-wise, while gathering filth to throw—
Mire, from the midden of the Prussian camp?
I, too, a craven, though not unashamed.
Hear how you void, because you cannot fight,
The long-secreted venom of your spite:
I hear of Belgians by your heroes maimed:
Yet do not from my quivering forearm hew
The tainted hand that once shook hands with you.

The Chain Letter Scheme.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A letter was mailed to me by a friend, as follows:

Letter No. 29. April 14, 1915.

The suffering among the women and children and other non-combatants abroad, made destitute by the war, is beyond description, and immediate relief is necessary. These funds will be sent direct to the official charity authorities.

Please make four copies of this note and send them to four of your friends, number each one, one number higher than the one used on this, and all four to have the same number at the same time.

Please send ten (10c) cents with this note to Mr. Mark Eisner, 1,239 Madison Avenue, New York City.

The chain will end with 100. Those receiving that number should not send copies, but send ten cents only.

Please do not break this chain, as many dollars will be lost to a worthy cause.

Yours truly,

(Signed by the sender.)

I was about to respond to the requests when I realized that a rather large sum of money would in this way come into the hands of the collector; so, to satisfy my curiosity as to the existence of such a party, I sought the name at the given address in the telephone directory. But it was not there.

The friend who had sent me the letter, when I asked her about it, informed me that an acquaintance had sent her the letter, but that she had no knowledge of the originator.

How much would this unknown person accumulate if all who received a similar letter responded? Calculating the amount by raising 4 to the 29th power, (the number of my letter,) the result was: 288,230,376,151,711,744 letters, or $28,823,037,615,171,174.40, and to the 33d the amount reached over seven quintillion dollars, which, it seems to me, is more money than can be raised in the world.

More Cross at Crossings.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A paragraph in your issue of the 20th states that there is a movement on the part of the "Safety First Society" to secure safety zones for persons on foot at street intersections, "and a law to prohibit street crossing in the middle of a block."

In support of this demand statistics are given which state that during the first three months of the present year forty-nine persons have been killed at street intersections, and twelve while crossing in the middle of blocks. Apparently 55 per cent. of all fatalities have been in these two classes, 44 per cent. at street intersections and 11 per cent. while crossing in the middle of blocks. Thus the proportion of danger is four to one against crossing at street intersections.

Since street cars are stopping at the nearer crossings the danger of such crossings has been so increased that the pedestrian is obliged to exercise at least four times the care that would be needed if they stopped at further crossings, as formerly, and because motormen are not skillful in stopping their cars before they reach the crossing pedestrians are obliged to go around, either in front or in rear of the cars.

If the Safety First Society will lend its efforts to secure a law making it unlawful to turn to the left in meeting a person, they will do vastly more for the safety of pedestrians, and to expedite traffic.

Office Beggars.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been constantly annoyed by beggars coming into our office, which is on the level with the street. The means some of them employ to obtain five cents or even more is remarkable. On one occasion a man of fine appearance came into the office smiling and opened up his conversation with "I have left all my money and cardcase in my other suit. If you will be kind enough to loan me thirty-five cents for car fare to reach (he mentioned some town in New Jersey) I would appreciate it very much. As security I will leave these eyeglasses and call tomorrow and pay you the money." Now, I would have gladly let this man have the money but for one thing. That was that he carried a newspaper rolled up tightly and very much soiled and worn. If he had had a clean evening newspaper in his hand I would have taken him for a gentleman and handed him the money, but the paper he had did not blend with his make-up. On second thought, though, I wonder if he is an honest man.

September Morn Echoes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have observed the recent tendency to fill shop windows with pictures of nude women—a tendency which dates from the publication of the picture called "September Morn." The character of these pictures has become increasingly vulgar and suggestive, until those which are now displayed are fit only for the barroom, where they are usually seen. Their detrimental effect upon the minds of the thousands who daily see them is immeasurable. And what chance is there for the purity of mind we desire in the hundreds of school children who stop to look at them?

Can nothing be done to eliminate or restrict this disgraceful sight?

The Unwilling Scholars.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Professor Kuno Meyer says: "What I particularly resent in this matter (the awarding of the prize in the Harvard Advocate's war poem contest) is that international bad feeling has been drawn into the world of scholarship." Does Professor Meyer stop there and fail to resent the campaign of vilification against the United States which is carried on in Germany because we have failed to side with Germany in many things?

AN AMERICAN.

New York, April 28, 1915.

THE WEEK'S WAR WORK IN EUROPE.

Large Significance of the Unfinished Battle of Ypres; It Will Prove Whether the Allies' Line Is Impregnable.

The past week has been characterized by the tremendous effort of the Germans to break through the Allies' line between Ypres and Dixmude. For months the Germans were preparing for an offensive move. At least a half million men had been added to their field army and were held in reserve until the point of attack had been selected.

It was inevitable that this offense should begin when it did and that the objective should have been the line north of Ypres. The British line south of Ypres had twice been successful in breaking through the German line, and each time had made an advance of from two to four miles. The result was the bending back of the German line and the occupation of positions of considerable local importance. Lille was already threatened by these advances; the railroad from Ypres to Commines was under control of the British artillery. But Lille and the country west of Ypres was not the British objective. They were only the first steps of a much greater plan.

Undoubtedly England's greatest need is to cause the retirement of the German right wing until it no longer rests on the North Sea, but on the Dutch frontier. This cannot be accomplished by landing troops east of Ostend, because troops cannot be landed there without being in constant danger of destruction or capture before they could get into action. The only alternative is a constant process of nibbling at the German lines, gaining a little ground here, a little there, but constantly pushing the Germans back. If the Germans held to Ostend on the north and to Lille on the south this policy would, by bending back their centre, cause a continuous lengthening of their line between these points and a consequent decrease in the number of troops per mile of line. Sooner or later this line would reach its elastic limit.

Now consider for a moment Germany's position. England, by her attacks at Neuve Chapelle, St. Eloi, and Zillebeke, had, to some extent at least, shown her hand. She undoubtedly intended to attack, rest and attack again, always near the centre of the line. She had, and Germany knew she had, practically all her force in rear of the line of attack. Germany had half a million fresh troops and a great store of ammunition carefully conserved during the Winter. Where could they be used to best advantage? There was but one possible answer—against that point in the British line that was at the moment least strongly held. As a concentrated British attack had just been launched at Zillebeke and Hill No. 60 south of Ypres the probabilities were that this point would be north of Ypres. The German blow fell, therefore, at Langemarck and being successful there extended north to Bixschoote and south to Zonnebeke. The German offensive then shows that it was more truly a defensive measure against the British advances and has most effectively halted them at least for the time being. It is but another illustration of the adage that the best defense is a good offensive.

The battle of Ypres, however, is only in its initial stage. The German advance is for the time being checked, but the success of her offensive defense undoubtedly causes a picture of Calais and the Straits of Dover to loom up quite large on the German horizon. The character of the offensive will therefore probably change, and with further success assume a definite objective of its own. At no other time on the western front have so many men been engaged in such a restricted area, and not even in the first battle of Ypres, fought late last Fall, was the fighting so concentrated, so intense, or so determined. It is one of the great battles of the war, and will exercise a great influence on the future conduct of the war on the western front. To retain her prestige Germany must win. She has concentrated all her force in men and guns against a line the total length of which, including all local salients, is not more than fifteen miles. A permanent check here would be an admission that she cannot concentrate enough men and guns against any point in the Allies' line to break through, or, in other words, that the Allies' line is impregnable. This would mean that, except in isolated cases and for strictly defensive purposes, Germany's offensive efforts in the west were at an end. Offensive actions only can win a war, and when a nation loses its power of offense and bases its hopes solely on defensive actions it faces sure defeat.

Whether the German attack north of Ypres was, as it seems, but a defense against the British advance, or whether it was made only from an offensive standpoint, it certainly shows that the long inactive period spent in the trenches has not impaired Germany's ability to strike and strike hard. Nor has it impaired the efficiency in attack of the German organization. The same cannot be said of the Allies. In the battle of Neuve Chapelle the German lines were definitely broken. The Allies advanced through the break, but only a short distance had been traversed before the force of the attack was spent. This was due to lack of co-ordination between units, loss of contact and a certain loss of control of officers of practically all grades over their commands. This is extremely likely to occur under such circumstances unless discipline is unusually rigid and the general organization perfect. The German advance from Langemarck was a remarkable illustration of what organization means to the German Army. The advance was solid and at all times under control. There was no lack of cohesion, no scattering effort. After an advance of some miles, when the German line struck the Ypres Canal, their force was still there and their momentum, if anything, increased. This accounts for the fact that the hardest fighting in the entire movement has taken place around Steenstraate, Het Sase, and Lizerne. The German attack carried them across the canal, and near Lizerne they held a strong foothold on the western bank. Here they were checked, however, by the British, and finally, after severe fighting, the town of Lizerne has been retaken and is now in the hands of the Allies.

The town of Ypres, which is the key to the Yser valley, is still untaken, and there is no German force on the west bank of the canal. The present line of the Allies, even after their defeat, is in a very satisfactory position. The Ypres Canal, being directly in front of the British position to the north, offers an excellent defensive screen which the Germans will have difficulty in crossing. South of Ypres, Hill No. 60 gives the Allies a strong point of vantage, as well as a strong natural position. Germany has for days subjected it to a severe bombardment without apparent effect. In the centre, directly east of Ypres, this line is now a pronounced salient. This conformation of a battle line is to be avoided if possible, and it may yet prove an element of weakness to the Allies, particularly should the Germans drive south from St. Julien. On the whole, however, the Allies seem to have recovered from the first shock of the attack and are now holding all along the line; in fact, at certain points they have already taken the offensive.

Simultaneously with the German attack north of Ypres, practically the entire line as far south as Hartmanns-Weilerkopf blazed out. At La Bassée particularly was the fighting severe. This, however, was natural. It is not far from the Ypres line and would be to some extent affected reflectively by the fighting in the north, while at the same time by attacking there the Germans kept the Allies from sending any reinforcements north.

In the Argonne.

In the Argonne and on both sides of the German salient north and east of St. Mihiel, the week has seen intermittent fighting. The French are steadily nibbling at the German wedge, and in reality have but a little further to go in order to start serious trouble. From their position in Le Prêtre Forest, north of Regnieville, Thiancourt is almost within range of the heavy French artillery. A further advance of a mile or so through these forests and the northern edge will be reached. Thiancourt and the valley of the Mod River, through which valley runs the Thiancourt-Metz Railroad, will then be controlled by the French guns. As this railroad is the only German line of supply for its forces in the angle, the continued occupation of the angle by German troops will then be impossible. On the heights of the Meuse at Les Eparges and Combres there has during the week been some unusually severe fighting. In fact the French trenches of Colonne, near Les Eparges, have been under almost constant bombardment. Infantry attacks also have been pressed by both sides, but the effect has been negative. The lines are just about as they were with no added advantage to either.

Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, an important elevation in the Southern Vosges north of the Swiss border, after having changed hands several times during the week is again in the French lines. On the whole, therefore, the general situation in the west is practically the same as it was a week ago. The week has cost both belligerents heavily in men and in ammunition. As the Allies exceed the Germans in numbers and have still greater reserves on which to draw, and as the ammunition markets of the world are open to the Allies, whereas Germany is dependent solely on her own manufacture, the net result of the week's operations must be regarded as favorable to the Allies.

Then there is the renewal of military activity in the east from the Upper Niemen to the Dardanelles. Of the various movements now under way in this theatre the most important is that in the Dardanelles, with Constantinople as the objective. After hammering at the fortifications on both European and Asiatic sides of the strait for months, with great loss in men and ships and with futility equally as great, the Allies have adopted a plan at once so simple, so direct, and so promising of results that the only wonder is it was not employed at the outset. Troops have been landed on both coasts, the larger quota on the European side, where landings have been effected at five different points. The details of the defenses of the Gallipoli Peninsula are not known. It is extremely probable, however, that the angle of fire of most of the guns in the batteries and fortifications will limit their field of action to the water front and the allied fleet co-operating with the land force. The Turkish field or mobile army, with its accompanying artillery, with German reinforcements, will therefore be the Sudtan's only defense against the Allies' invasion.

At the Dardanelles.

To determine that the number of Germans with the Turkish army in Gallipoli is very small is only a question of arithmetic. Germany has few to spare—she has been generous in her loan of officers, but Turkey must depend almost entirely upon her own troops. Gallipoli contains a number of strong defensive positions, is extremely rough, being cut up by numerous small mountain peaks, and has one wide twisting valley which runs from the Mediterranean entrance of the strait to Kavak near the entrance at the Sea of Marmora, following generally the longer axis of the peninsula. This valley is controlled throughout its length by the numerous hills with which it is surrounded. Nevertheless it will be an extremely difficult matter for a defensive army to prevent the advance of an enemy. The extreme narrowness of the peninsula (it is shaped somewhat like the island of Manhattan) limits the number of troops that can be utilized on a defensive line. Coupled with this limitation is the fact that any position Turkey takes will be subjected to the fire of the guns of the large battleships of the Allies, the great range of which enables them to take a position either in the Aegean Sea or the Gulf of Saros and fire completely across the peninsula.

The one chance of Turkey seems to be to defeat these landing parties in detail before they have time to effect a junction and consolidate their positions. Failing to do this, there is small chance that Turkey will be able to protect the various forts and batteries from being attacked in the rear, against which the only barrier is the mobile army. Control of Gallipoli by the Allies will not, however, of itself solve the problem of giving Russia free access to the Mediterranean, which, of course, is the primary object of the Dardanelles movement. The forts on the Asiatic side must also be taken, and held or destroyed, following which must come the destruction of the defenses of the Bosporus. The latter will be an easy task, but the work of the Allies on the Asiatic side will be somewhat more difficult even than the reduction of Gallipoli. Such reports as have emanated from this section indicate that the progress of the Allies has been extremely rapid. If history can be relied on to repeat itself the solution of the whole war may be found at the entrance to the Sea of Marmora.

In the Carpathian battlefields severe fighting has been resumed. The Russians are drawing closer and closer around Uzok Pass, while Austria, as if realizing that sooner or later this point must pass from their hands, is concentrating still more heavily against the Stryj-Munkacs line. This is and will be a point fraught with danger to a Russian advance. Lemburg and the Russian line of communications will be in constant peril, and if the Russian forces facing Austria along the Stryj River should give way, the entire Russian Army occupying the Carpathian summits would be imperiled. The situation here, however, as in the west, holds exactly the same status as a week ago.

REFUGEES IN FRANCE NEVER IN SUCH NEED

Mrs. Warren Urges That Americans Continue Their Liberal Giving.

TENTS FOR 20,000 SERBIANS

Up-State Committees Active, Under Dr. Finley, Raising Funds for Belgians.

Mrs. Whitney Warren, Treasurer of the American Committee of the "Secours National," for the relief of the women and children of France, announced yesterday that the needs of French refugees and other French sufferers was never greater than at the present moment. It was recently said in Boston, and the statement was widely circulated, that the funds in hand are sufficient to care for the French sufferers, a report that Mrs. Warren says is absolutely without warrant. In a letter to the person, whose name is withheld, who is credited with giving out the statement Mrs. Warren, among other things, said, with reference to the situation among the noncombatant population of France:

I have cabled to Whitney—a rather unnecessary thing on the whole—but simply because I said I would. When one thinks that 350,000 people will be returned from Germany these days—and you say many Belgians are coming—$1,000,000 will not go very far. The Secours National very likely has that amount ready for this contingency, and as it probably will be able to only provide for 15 per cent. out of that million, it goes to show that much, much more money and clothes are needed. Mr. —— is, of course, perfectly correct in his statement, and it is quite right that he should tell it—when things are honestly done there are no concealments necessary—only he should not stop there, but tell the rest.

Instead of $1,000,000, France will need $6,000,000 or $8,000,000 or more to care for all the destitute.

My point is that this excuse will be taken by those not wishing to give further, so that the truth should be given to them. I will forward Whitney's cable when it comes. I hardly think Whitney is such a stupid person as to be blind to conditions when he is over there for that purpose, or such an unkind person as to have me go on working unnecessarily.

Contributions to the fund should be sent to Mrs. Whitney Warren at 16 East Forty-seventh Street. The fund in America now totals $72,885.40. Subscriptions of $10 or more received yesterday were:

Relief for Serbia.

On the steamship Earl of Elgin, which sailed for Saloniki yesterday, the Serbian Committee shipped a large consignment of hospital and relief supplies to Serbia. The shipment included twenty large tents, each capable of sheltering 1,000 refugees, and eighty-nine cases of clothing. The tents and clothing were the gifts of A. T. White and family, and are valued at about $15,000. Other items in the consignments were twelve cases of hospital supplies from the Vacation War Relief Committee, seventeen miscellaneous cases of clothing, and 168 bundles of farming tools.

The Serbian Agricultural Relief Committee has offices at 70 Fifth Avenue. Its fund now amounts to $50,770.81. New subscriptions received yesterday were:

Active for Relief Up-State.

Up-State New York people are industriously pushing the work of collecting money and food for Belgium, and the prospects are that the third State ship, which will sail this month under charter to the Commission for Relief in Belgium of 71 Broadway, will carry as large a cargo as any of its predecessors.

Since the acceptance by Dr. John H. Finley, Commissioner of Education, of the chairmanship of the State committee, he has worked actively organizing local committees.

In the last week he has visited the local committee in Buffalo, and reports from that city show that the various committees heretofore existing have been consolidated as a sub-committee of the commission. Buffalo has been generous, and up to March 15 had given $46,494.09. Of this amount nearly $42,000 has been spent for flour and 536 bushels of beans. The committee has a cash balance for the purchase of other food of $4,590.57.

MEMORIAL TO KARL BITTER.

Arts and Letters Societies to Honor Sculptor on Wednesday Night.

Six societies of arts and letters are to join in a public memorial meeting to Karl Bitter, the sculptor, at the Ethical Culture Hall on Wednesday evening at 8:15 o'clock. Special invitations have been sent by the committee in charge to a number of the friends of Mr. Bitter and to a number of prominent persons, and the responses from these make it certain that the memorial meeting will be a notable gathering in honor of the artist.

Dr. Andrew D. White, President emeritus of Cornell University, wrote in answer to an invitation:

"I shall do my best to be present, and, if so, would gladly pay a short tribute to the memory of Mr. Bitter. I feel that he was one of the most true, genuine, and noble men I have ever known, and my acquaintance in various parts of the world has been large. I shall do my best to be there, although it is possible that my doctor may think that I should not yet expose myself to the pressure of strong feeling which would certainly be aroused by a commemorative service to a man whom I regarded as so dear a friend."

Daniel Chester French, the sculptor, wrote from San Francisco:

"I regret extremely that I cannot return home in time to pay my tribute of affection and admiration and respect for the dear man whose death we mourn so deeply. His loss to the fraternity of sculptors is inestimable; to his friends, it is beyond words."

Speakers at the meeting will be Dr. Felix Adler, George McAneny, Herbert Adams, John G. Milburn, and Oswald G. Villard. The societies joining in holding the memorial are: The National Sculptors' Society, the National Academy of Design, the Architectural League of New York, the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the Art Commission Associates, and the Century Association.

Members of the committee having the meeting in charge are: Frank L. Babbott, Arnold W. Brunner, Herbert Adams, John W. Alexander, Edwin Howland Blashfield, Cass Gilbert, William A. Boring, Robert Aitken, H. A. McNeil, Jules Guerin, Henry R. Bacon, and Oswald G. Villard.

The public is invited to the meeting.

POPE BLESSED BRIDAL PAIR.

Miss Marguerite Loughran Wedded to William F. Straukamp.

At the marriage of Miss Marguerite Loughran, daughter of Mrs. Michael Loughran of 683 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn, to William F. Straukamp, which took place on Tuesday morning in the Church of St. John the Baptist, a cablegram was received from Rome in which Pope Benedict XV. sent his blessing to the couple. The Rev. J. W. Moore, C. M., officiated at the wedding, assisted by Mgr. McGoldrick and the Rev. James Kennedy.

Miss May Loughran, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Miss Bride McHale was the bridesmaid and James Medler served as best man. The ushers were Anthony Vermyllon and Charles McAlpine.

ROBINSON-GHEEN WEDDING.

Son of Director of Metropolitan Museum Weds Gertrude Gheen.

The wedding of Miss Gertrude Gheen daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis H. Gheen of West Chester, Penn., to Phillips Brooks Robinson son of Edward Robinson, Director of the Metropolitan Art Museum, and Mrs. Robinson, took place at 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon at the home of the bride, 45 East Eighty-fourth Street. The Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks of St. Bartholomew's Church, performed the ceremony in the presence of a few relatives and friends.

Marion Gheen was her sister's maid of honor, and there were three little pages, Hawthorne Howard Francis Howard, and John Quincy Hunsicker, 3d. Mansfield Ferry acted as best man. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson are spending their honeymoon in Beverly Farms, Mass., where they have taken a cottage, and upon their return they will make their home in this city.

MARRIED IN PORTO RICO.

Miss Gladys Carroll Is Now Mrs. Joseph Benson Marvin.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Gladys Carroll, daughter of Mrs. William Bloodgood Trowbridge of Saranac Lake, N. Y., by a former marriage, and Joseph Benson Marvin, son of the late Dr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Marvin of Louisville, Ky., which took place on April 9 in St. John's Church, San Juan, Porto Rico.

The bride's father was the late Anson Livingston Carroll of New York. The ceremony was performed by Bishop Colmore of Porto Rico. The bride's stepfather, W. B. Trowbridge, gave her in marriage. Her sister, Miss Ruth L. Carroll, was her only attendant, and Irving Hastings Larom was best man. Mr. Marvin was graduated from Harvard University, class of '05.

Need for Help Still Very Great

We spent last month $29,382.30 for the necessities of life given to 5,533 families.

We have in our care today 5,153 families. These can't help themselves just now because of unemployment, sickness, or some other misfortune.

The needy are now not suffering from the cold. There, however, is just as great a demand for food and other necessities as during January.

Won't you help?

WILKINSON LIBRARY WILL BE AUCTIONED

Rare Volumes Include Many Ancient Mexican and Maya Histories.

ONE BY AVEDANO DATED 1695

The library of Paul Wilkinson of Mexico City, comprising literature relating to Mexico, Central America, and the Maya Indians, will be sold at the American Art Galleries on May 7. A number of rare items are included in it.

A manuscript, never published, consists of part of three volumes, folio, "Misiones del Norte y Yucatan," dated 1695-6, by Avedano, from the Ramirez collection and sold by Bernard Quaritch. There are 135 pages dealing with the Itzás-Cehachez of Yucatan, and at the end is a fine manuscript map of the Peten-Itza region.

Another manuscript is the "Chilam Balam, Book of Kána," eighty-seven double pages, in Spanish and Maya, of the chronicle referred to by Daniel G. Brinton in his writings. It is from the Bishop Carillo y Ancona's collection. The illustrations are especially noteworthy. Accompanying it is an annex which consists of fifty-five double pages additional to the main chronicle.

"Arte en lengua de Maya," by Father Juan Coronel of the Franciscan Order, and Guardian of the "Covento de Tikox," published in Mexico in 1620, is of the greatest rarity. It was unknown to Sabin, and the remarkable collection of Mexicana formed by Ramirez did not contain a copy. It is probably the first printed grammar of the Maya language of Yucatan, and a revision of the manuscript Maya grammar of Bishop Diego Landa. On the flyleaf are manuscript notes in the Maya language in a contemporary hand. Father Coronel, graduate of the University of Alcala, Spain, went to Yucatan in 1590, where he learned and taught the language of the Indians. He was one of the disciples of Cogolludo, and was guardian of the Recollect Convent of Mejorada. He died in one of the convents of Merida in 1651, aged 82 years.

Sixteenth Century Manuscripts.

The "Dictionary of the Tarascan or Michoacán Language," (Spanish-Tarascan and Tarasca-Spanish,) by Father Maturina Gilberti, is a wonderful sixteenth century manuscript of 261 folio pages. It is from the library of the learned Mexican scholar, Dr. N. Leon, who has written the following note on the first flyleaf: "This manuscript is an unpublished autograph by Father Maturino Gilberti, a Franciscan, the greatest authority in the Tarascan or Michoacán language. I believe this dictionary to be later than that which he had printed in Mexico in 1539, and at the same time enlarged and more correct. I found it among the books which belonged to the Licenciado Don Eufemio Mendoza in Guadalajara the year 1913, and I purchased it in the Archbishop's Palace."

"Noticias de la Provincia de Oaxaca" is a manuscript of 390 quarto pages, and is on vellum. It was written about 1800, and seems to be the work of Francisco Villarega. Another manuscript is the record of the Xiu family of Yucatan, from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century, with a curious old Indian map of Yucatan of 1557, and the Maya idea of a family tree beginning with Adam and Eve. The Xiu family was one of the royal Indian lines, and after the conquest was most closely related to the Spaniards.

Extremely rare is "Oraciones devotas" of Joseph de Acosta, Mérida de Yucatan, 1851, and "Arte de Lengua Totonaca," by Joseph Z. Bonilla, Mexico, 1752. The Totonaca dialect is spoken in the northern parts of the Province of Puebla, and in part of the Province of Vera Cruz, and is allied to both the Maya and Aztec languages.

There will be a sale of rare Americana on Friday by Charles F. Heartman, 36 Lexington Avenue. Among the items is General Philip Schuyler's "Memorandum Book" during the Revolution, a volume of ninety pages, sixty-nine of which are closely covered with notes and data in his hand. There is also the extremely rare London (1781) edition of "The Cow Chase: an Heroick Poem in Three Cantos. Written at New York 1780 by the late Major André."

"A Declaration of the Sad and Great Persecution and Martyrdom of the People of God, called Quakers, in New England for the Worshipping of God," by E. Burrough, small quarto, London, 1660, is also rare. "A Survey of the Summe of Church Discipline" by Thomas Hooker, London, 1648, is the scarce original edition.

Franklin Volume.

Benjamin Franklin's "Cool Thoughts on the Present Situation of our Public Affairs," printed at Philadelphia in 1764, is the rare first edition. Peter Clark's "Sermon containing a word in Season to Soldiers," Boston, 1755, seems not to have been sold before at auction. "Kort en bondigh verhael," Amsterdam, 1667, is the most complete and authentic account of the war which resulted in the loss to Holland of the New Netherlands, by the Treaty of Breda, and containing the first printed report of the transactions which brought about the surrender of New York. "Istoria o brevissima relations della Distintione dell' Indie Occidentali," by De Las Casas, Venice, 1626, is the rare first Italian translation of his first and most celebrated tract.

D. McLeod's "Brief Review of the Settlement of Upper Canada by the U. E. Loyalists and Scotch Highlanders in 1783, and of the grievances which compelled the Canadas to have recourse to Arms in Defense of their Rights and Liberties in the Years 1837 and 1838," Cleveland, 1841, is a scarce book. McLeod was a major general in the patriot army of Upper Canada and gives a comprehensive account of the military executions, burnings and sackings of towns and villages by the British during the troubles of 1837-38.

"A Word for the Armie; and two words to the Kingdome. To Cleare the One and Cure the Other," by Hugh Peters, quarto, London, 1647, is extremely rare. Peters was born in 1598 and was an independent divine. He became Minister at Salem, Mass., where he rebuked the Governor, Henry Vane, for interfering with church matters. He took a warm interest in the foundation of the Colony of Connecticut. Returning to England, he won many recruits to the Parliamentary Army. In 1660 he was executed at Charing Cross.

A rare Tory tract is "A View of the Controversy Between Great Britain and Her Colonies. By A. W. Farner," New York, 1774. It was in reply to a "Full Vindication of the Measures of Congress," which was written by Alexander Hamilton. The authorship of this tract has been a question of considerable dispute. It is believed to have been written by Samuel Seabury, who was accused at the time and carried to New Haven, where he was kept in confinement. Copies of the tract were burned, and the office of the printer, Jonas Rivington, was entered, his presses broken and his type thrown into the street.

"The Redemption" at St. Matthew's.

Gounod's oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung this evening by the choir of St. Matthew's Church, West Eighty-fourth Street, near Central Park West, under the direction of Maurice C. Rumsey. The soloists will be Miss Ellie Ebeling, soprano; Robert Armour, tenor, and Bertram Peacock, baritone.

38 City Marshals Appointed.

Mayor Mitchel yesterday reappointed twenty-one City Marshals and appointed seventeen new ones. Of these, sixteen were Democrats, fourteen Republicans, six Progressives and two Independence Leaguers.

ELLEN TERRY SAILS HOME.

She Hopes for a Great Memorial Theatre to Shakespeare.

Ellen Terry sailed yesterday on the New York for England, after having spent the Winter in the United States. The English actress has been away from home more than a year, having been in Australia when the war began. The war determined her to come to America to give her Shakespearean discourses, but on account of trouble with her eyes she only made a few appearances on the lecture platform. On sailing Miss Terry expressed the wish that the English-speaking people would build a great memorial theatre to Shakespeare.

"Of course I am heart and soul with the Allies," she said, "although one must, in common fairness, acknowledge that the Germans honor Shakespeare in the best of all possible ways by the frequent performance of his dramas. I wish England and America would do even more by building a theatre in his honor. You know, in Germany you can hardly go into a city without finding a performance of one of Shakespeare's plays, while here and in England of late it is a custom more honored in the breach than in the observance.

"It is the children I am pleading for when I plead for Shakespeare. Are they to know nothing of the work of the greatest master of the English stage? Must they go through life without the wonderful inspiration that the beauty and poetry of Shakespeare gave us who are older and had the opportunity of seeing his plays in the formative period of our lives?"

DANCERS AT WHITE SULPHUR.

Throng of Vacationists Attend Saturday Night Ball—The Arrivals.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, West Va., May 1.—One of the most eventful and lively weeks at White Sulphur Springs was brought to a close tonight when the regular Saturday night ball was held. This is an occasion on which many of the vacationists here for the cure venture forth for the first time during the week and dance. There was an unusual number of dancers tonight and at midnight no one wanted the music stopped.

The weather has been ideal this week, and the out-of-door people who indulge in the golf, tennis, and riding have been favored by weather that made it possible to be out early and late. Among the many notable incidents on the links this week was the setting of a new amateur record for the course by Ricard Garlick of New York during a foursome today. When the scores were finally compared at the end of the match it was seen that Mr. Garlick had set a new record of sixty-eight for eighteen-hole courses, breaking the old record by one and bogey by four.

Mrs. John De Koven entertained four friends on a drive to Lewisburg today and luncheon on the return trip at Elmhurst Farm. Dr. and Mrs. J. Norman Henry spent the day in a ride to Organ Cave, and in exploring its subterranean passages. A party formed by Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Kountze drove to Alleghany, Va., and stopped at the Log Cabin for tea.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles I. Cragin of Washington arrived at the Greenbrier late tonight from Florida. They were among the last of the cottage colony to leave Palm Beach, and they will remain at White Sulphur until the Summer.

The arrivals at the Greenbrier today included Mr. and Mrs. A. Heeren of New York, Mrs. T. W. Rutherford and Miss Ruth Rutherford of Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Gross of Cincinnati Mrs. John Thixton of Owensboro, Ky., and Harry C. Kahlo of Indianapolis, Mr. and Mrs. P. Hart of Orange, N. J., Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Reynolds of Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Farrell of Newark, N. J.

MISS D. A. MAYER ENGAGED.

Novel Announcement of Her Engagement to Paul Gannon at Luncheon.

The engagement of Miss Dorothy Alice Mayer, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. C. Mayer of 91 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, to Paul Gannon, a son of Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Gannon of Concord, N. H., was announced yesterday at a luncheon that Miss Hazel Robbins Browne gave for Miss Mayer at 543 Ocean Avenue.

During the luncheon a large hatbox was brought in and from this twelve miniature hatboxes, filled with old-time flowers, were served to the guests, each box having the cards of Miss Mayer and her fiancé attached, while Miss Mayer's ring was suspended from the one handed to her. The guests included Mrs. Norman Gaynor, who is a cousin of Miss Mayer.

Daisy Duval to Wed V. C. Kearns.

The engagement of Miss Daisy Duval, daughter of Mrs. Lawrence Duval of Brooklyn, to Vincent C. Kearns, a son of Terance J. Kearns of Brooklyn, formerly of New York, was announced at a bridge party yesterday afternoon. Mr. Kearns was graduated from Fordham University. Miss Duval is a niece of the late Dr. Dominick G. Bodkin and is a member of St. Mary's Junior Auxiliary. The luncheon, which Mrs. Duval gave for her daughter at her residence 1,080 Dean Street, was attended by a number of guests from New York.

Engagements.

Mrs. Robert Forsyth Little announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Julia Whiton Little, to Dr. E. Ross Faulkner of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvan Markle of Hazleton, Penn., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Emily Markle, to William Newall Bannard of this city. No date has been set for the wedding.

Mrs. H. T. Weidenfeld of 229 West 101st Street announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Edith Weidenfeld, to Willard C. Wetmore, son of the late Dr. Edward W. Wetmore of Albany, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Heimerdinger of 21 East 82d Street announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Miriam Hortense Heimerdinger, to J. Franklyn Myers, son of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus A. Myers.

Mr. and Mrs. Solomon S. Jaine of 25 East Ninety-ninth Street announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mildred Jaine, to Rabbi Eugene Kohn of Baltimore, Md. A reception will be held at the Jaine home this evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman A. Schmidt of Euclid Hall, Eighty-sixth Street and Broadway, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Alice V. Schmidt, to H. Laidlaw Dewey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Dewey of this city. Mr. Dewey is a graduate of Princeton, class of '13. No date has been set for the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael M. Imerblum of 35 Fisher Avenue, White Plains, N. Y., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Cecelia E. Imerblum, to Dr. Saul Schlegman, also of White Plains. No date has been set for the wedding.

MANILA BENEFACTOR, COL. MAUS, RETIRES

Veteran of Army Medical Corps Rid City of Plague Danger and Smallpox.

QUITS ON SATURDAY AT 64

Known as Champion of the Beerless Canteen—Favors Prohibition in Time of War.

Colonel L. Mervin Maus, Medical Corps, U. S. A., at present on duty as Surgeon General of the Eastern Department of the Army on Governor's Island, will be retired from active service on reaching the age limit of 64 years next Saturday. He will reach the age limit with the distinction of having served longer than any other officer in the Medical Corps of the army. He was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the corps nearly forty-one years ago.

Colonel Maus is a veteran of Indian campaigns, of the Spanish war, and of the Philippines, having been the first American head of the Public Health Department in the Islands. He is a Marylander and received his medical education at the University of Maryland, after which he took postgraduate courses in this city, Paris, and Vienna.

It was Colonel Maus who, at the beginning of the Spanish war, was ordered to this city as the medical officer to aid in the mustering into service of the New York volunteers. After this work was completed he was ordered to Tampa as Surgeon General of the Seventh Army Corps, and went with it to Cuba. Shortly after his return to the United States he was ordered to the Philippines, where he was appointed by ex-President Taft, then Governor General of the Islands, to organize an efficient public health service. It was under his direction that Manila was cleaned of rats and that the danger of bubonic plague, then a constant menace, was eradicated. He also organized the leper colony on the island of Culion and made Manila immune to smallpox by compulsory vaccination of the entire population.

Col Maus often has been in the public eye as a result of his war on alcohol. He believes that alcoholic beverages should be absolutely prohibited in armies when they are in active service. Likewise, he has argued always that the beerless canteen is the best of all canteens. He has pointed out time and time again that the officers engaged in aviation should be teetotalers.

"One reform that is needed in all armies," he said a few weeks before the war cloud gathered in Europe, "is greater restrictions concerning alcohol in time of war. Smoking should be allowed as one of the pleasures, but alcohol should be absolutely prohibited. It was responsible, in my opinion, for a large part of the stomach and mental troubles of our troops in the Cuban campaign and in the Philippines. It is a fact that soldiers do not know how to use alcohol, and they never will."

Of the use of alcohol and its fatal consequences for aviators, Col. Maus said:

"Flying, of all things, requires a cool head, clear eye, and a steady hand, conditions which are absolutely impossible with those who drink even moderately. Until the day of judgment no one will ever learn how many of the hundreds of aviators who have lost their lives in the last few years have alcohol to blame for the tragedy.

"It is my candid opinion that any officer of the army or navy who renders himself incompetent or stupid through drink in actual warfare might just as well enter into treasonable relations with the enemy and sell his country.

"Practically all of the crime committed in the army, directly or indirectly, can be traced to the effects of alcohol. Murders, robberies, desertions, courts-martial, and dismissal of officers, prison and guardhouse sentences of enlisted men, fights, brawls, broken friendships, misery, wretchedness, and moral degeneracy should generally be ascribed to the use of intoxicants.

"With a bar the post exchange becomes a loafing and drinking place for the men. I feel certain that a large number of young soldiers who do not drink today would, in self-defense have to treat their comrades and drink themselves, if they visited the exchanges at all, were beer sold there. Fortunately a wave of temperance has permeated the country since those days and affected the habits of the army as well as those of men in civil life."

Colonel Maus is a brother of Brig. Gen. Marion P. Maus, U. S. A., retired. Mrs. Maus, like her husband, has long been prominent in army life, and for years has been one of the leading women workers in the various army relief societies.

CHILDREN GIVE TO MISSIONS

Lenten Offering in Episcopal Sunday Schools Totaled $9,805.

Three thousand Episcopal children attended the service for the presentation of the Sunday school Lenten offering for missions at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine yesterday afternoon. Nearly 1,000 of these took part as a vested choir. The little choristers from 100 Sunday schools gathered in Synod Hall and marched in procession into the cathedral.

The service was conducted by Bishop David H. Greer, assisted by several ministers of the diocese. "You can be missionaries," said Bishop Greer. "Love Jesus Christ and tell others about Him, so they will love Him, too. No one can be a real, true Christian without being a missionary."

The Right Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, Bishop of the Missionary District of Cuba, told of missionary work in Cuba, Alaska, and among the Western Indians.

The total of the offering was announced as $9,805.94. The Bishop's banner, awarded to the Sunday school giving the largest amount, was won for the third successive time by Holy Trinity Sunday school, Harlem. The offering of this school was $808.19.

The banner presented by the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires of St. Thomas's Church for the school giving the highest per capita was won by Christ Church of Rye. The offering was $5.25 per scholar.

PILGRIMAGE FOR CATHOLICS.

Memorial to be Unveiled in St. Nicholas's Church.

Catholics in New York and New Jersey will make a pilgrimage this week, beginning Tuesday night, to St. Nicholas's Church, in Second Street, to honor the memory of the founders of that parish and to view the diamond jubilee memorial which has just been erected in the sanctuary and will be unveiled Tuesday night.

The memorial is an electrically illuminated votive chandelier, in the form of a golden arch, tipped with a crown of eternity, beneath which is suspended a huge cross, also lit up by one great stream of electric flow, and about which are hundreds of small, starlike bulbs of equal candle power.

The arched chandelier rises right and left from the high altar groinings directly in the rear of the tabernacle, reaching a point of the ceiling and bringing out every detail of the great painting over the high altar. Each branch of the vine is filled with numerous electric bulbs of varying candle power, which meet a shower of tiny electric lights falling in graceful lines from the pivotal point of the ceiling.

On each branch of the vine is a scroll with the name of some old family of the parish—the first German Catholic parish in the Archdiocese of New York.

Today and tomorrow numerous prelates now in the city will visit the memorial. At the formal unveiling the Rev. John A. Nageleisen, rector, will preside, and members of the Catholic Benevolent Legion, Knights of Columbus, and the parochial sodalities will march in a procession.

RELATIVES ARE CUT OFF.

Get None of C. F. Cronin's $100,000 "for Personal Reasons."

The will of Cornelius F. Cronin, filed for probate yesterday, disposes of an estate in excess of $100,000, all of which is bequeathed to a number of religious, charitable and scientific organizations, and cuts off his nearest relatives in the following words:

"For personal reasons I make no provision for my cousins, Thomas F. Nagle, Margaret Hoy and Julia C. Rowe."

The residuary estate is to be divided into eight equal parts. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul and the Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis, for the benefit of St. Joseph's Hospital, receive two parts each. One part each goes to the Institute for the Blind, the Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace, the New York Catholic Protectory, for use of St. Phillip's Home for Industrious Boys, and the Servants of Relief for Incurable Cancer. The latter institution gets an additional $10,000.

The Missionary Society of the Most Holy Redeemer and the College of St. Francis Xavier are left $1,000 each to be used for masses for the soul of the testator, while $500 is bequeathed to the Roman Catholic Church of St. Paul the Apostle for similar masses. The Trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral are to care for the burial plot of the testator, who leaves $250 for that purpose.

ORPHANS' HOME BUYS SITE.

Bethlehem Asylum Obtains Tract on Staten Island.

The Bethlehem Orphan and Half Orphans' Asylum, which is supported by the Evangelical Lutheran Churches of New York City and its vicinity, has purchased for its new home about twenty acres on Staten Island, in the town of Arrochar.

The property forms the last family holdings of the large Alexander B. Barrett estate, owned by the family since 1839, and was bought from Virginia Barrett Gibbs, one of the heirs. It has an extensive frontage on the northerly side of Fingerboard Road, and commands fine views of the bay and harbor. Plans for several new buildings are being prepared, and the main structure, which will be started this season, will cost nearly $100,000.

The asylum was incorporated in 1888, and has been at College Point for many years. The buildings there will accommodate fewer than 150, and the growing needs of the asylum have led to the decision to move to enlarged quarters, where the best type of modern buildings can be provided. D. Lankenau is President of the asylum and A. B. Schmidt Treasurer.

DR. A. C. MYERS RESIGNS.

Will Give Up Work with Marble Collegiate Church on July 1.

The Rev. Dr. Alfred E. Myers, assistant pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, has resigned after a service of twenty-three years, almost as long as the service of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. David James Burrell.

Before accepting his present charge Dr. Myers was with the Westminster Church of Syracuse, and organized the Memorial Presbyterian Church and several others. He has been the pastor of churches in Bronxville and Owasco. When he came to the Marble Collegiate Church he undertook the pastoral, visitation, and administrative work.

During a year that Dr. Myers spent abroad he attended lectures at the University of Berlin. He is the Corresponding Secretary of the Franco-American Committee of Evangelization, a member of the Lord's Day Alliance, a member of the Executive Committee of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, and of many other organizations and fraternities.

Dr. Myer's resignation will take effect on July 1.

STUDENT DEBTS TO BE PAID.

New York University Levies $5 Tax for the Purpose.

According to the budget adopted by the Executive Board of New York University, the sum necessary to carry on its ten schools for 1915-16 will approximate $670,635.01. The university expects to receive $636,508, of which $320,985 will come from students' fees.

Among the new courses is one designed to furnish the training necessary for State health officers under the new requirements of the State Health Council.

At the request of the student body of the College of Arts and the School of Applied Science, it was voted to impose a yearly tax of $5 on each student registered in these schools. The money will go to the support of all nonathletic activities with the exception of fraternities. The committee also provided for the appointment of an alumnus treasurer for these schools. This man will have control over the finances of all the activities to which the tax of $5 extends. This is a guarantee that all bills which are incurred by student activities will be paid. Should a class not pay a debt before graduation it is probable that the diplomas will not be awarded. It is also likely that this will do away with the nonpayment of damages which are the result of under-class fights.

Earl B. Babcock, Assistant Professor of French in the University of Chicago since 1910, was appointed Professor of Romance Languages and Literature and head of the department. Claton C. Kohl, Ph. D., for five years head of the department of education at Mount Holyoke College, was made Associate Professor of Secondary Education.

The gift of $4,500 by Mrs. Russell Sage to continue the improvement of the property at University Heights was announced.

Announcement was made of a Summer course for a study of the geologic and physiographic problems of certain national parks and parts of the Pacific Coast. The party will leave New York on July 2.

NEW CHELSEA BATHS OPEN.

Gymnasium, Pool, and Marly Showers in the Building.

In the presence of city officials and nearly 1,000 other persons Marcus M. Marks, Borough President, dedicated the new Chelsea Neighborhood Baths, at 407 to 413 West Twenty-eighth Street, yesterday afternoon. George McAneny, President of the Board of Aldermen; Dr. Haven Emerson, Deputy Commissioner of Health; Alderman Frank Dowling, Commissioner of Correction Davis, and Dr. Arnold B. Armstrong, director of the department of social welfare of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, were among those who were present and spoke.

The new building contains four floors and a roof garden, with a gymnasium on the third floor. Every modern appliance for the sanitary filtration and heating of water is provided in the basement and there is also a public laundry. On the first floor there are 64 shower rooms, and in the rear is a swimming pool 60 by 24 feet. The second floor contains 74 shower rooms and a balcony around the pool. Adjoining the gymnasium are 20 shower rooms and a room containing lockers. On the fourth floor is a running track the entire length of the building.

Mr. Marks pointed out that this was the thirteenth public bath to be built in the city, the first one having been constructed in 1901 in Rivington Street.

Lessons in first aid to the injured were given by Fred Mills, Inspector of the United States Volunteer Life Saving Corps, and Charles E. Raynor gave an exhibition of fancy swimming. Under direction of the Misses Mott Osborne and Lillian Glasford, instructors in the Twenty-third Street public bath, thirty young women went through water evolutions and Miss Adelaide Trapp did fancy diving.

SAVE JOHN EVERS'S SISTER.

Mrs. Denning, Rejected at Bellevue, Leaps Into East River.

After being refused admittance to Bellevue Hospital, where she had applied for treatment for her nerves, a woman who gave her name as Mrs. Jane Denning and said she was a waitress, 32 years old, residing at 145 West 147th Street, and a sister of "Johnny" Evers, the noted baseball player, attempted to commit suicide yesterday by leaping from a pier at the foot of East Thirty-first Street into the East River.

Joseph Apento, 17 years old, of 308 East Twenty-ninth Street, saw the woman jump, and, climbing down a pile below the dock and holding to a projecting spike with one hand, he seized the woman's dress with the other hand and held her in spite of her struggles to free herself until the arrival of Patrolman MacCormack of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station. The officer, with the aid of several bystanders, lifted the woman from the water, and she was then arrested.

Mrs. Denning said she had been suffering from attacks of nervous despondency and had wished to be taken into a hospital until she might improve. She called at Bellevue Friday morning, she said, but instead of being allowed to remain there was given a bottle of medicine and sent home. She called again yesterday morning and saw an interne, who told her he could not admit her. Then she walked up First Avenue to the first open pier, from which she plunged.

She was treated by Dr. Martin and removed to Bellevue in an ambulance, suffering from submersion. Her condition is not serious.

Judaeans to Discuss Immigrants.

The Judaeans will meet this evening to review some of the chief features of their work on behalf of the immigrant. "Twenty-five Years' Work in the Americanization of the Immigrant" is the subject announced for these speakers: Eugene S. Benjamin of the Baron de Hirsch Fund; Lee Kohns of the Educational Alliance; Dr. Charles S. Bernheimer, Hebrew Educational Society, Brooklyn, and Dr. Henry Moskowitz. The meeting, which takes place at 8:30 o'clock at the Hotel Majestic, will be preceded by a business session for the election of officers.

Friends Honor Justice Freschi.

Friends of John J. Freschi gathered in the cascade ballroom of the Biltmore last night at a dinner given to celebrate his recent advancement from the City Magistrate's bench to Justice of the Court of Special Sessions. George Gordon Battle acted as toastmaster, and Ernest J. Cuosso presented a silver loving cup to Justice Freschi. Among the speakers were Collector Malone, Fire Commissioner Adamson, Henry Clews, Magistrate William McAdoo, Theodore Rousseau, Dr. Antonio Stella, and Professor George Chase.
